LEBANON'S CHIEF DEFIES GENERAL, REFUSES TO QUIT

Ahdab, After Announcement of Seizing Helm. Takes No Action to Oust President

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Saturday, March 13 — The general who has proclaimed himself military governor of Lebanon continued yesterday to demand the resignation of President Suleiman Franjeh, but the President refused to step down.

Brig. Gen. Abdel Aziz al-Ahdab, a Sunni Moslem who has been commander of the Beirut garrison, made no move during the day to evict the President from his official residence east of the capital, where the Christian head of state conferred with his political allies behind barricades.

Gunmen took to the streets here in large numbers, setting up numerous roadblocks, and there was some scattered sniping and shooting, some of it in celebration of the eve of the birthday of the Prophet Mohammed.

Some Planes Get In

"The airport is open but flights are suspended," said an airport official. But some planes landed.

[In Tel Aviv, Defense Minister Shimon Peres warned Friday that Israel would have to react if its border security was affected by the upheaval in Lebanon. Page 4.]

An ultrarightist organization called the Guardians of the Cedars, whose proclaimed goal is the expulsion of all Palestinians from Lebanon, announced its support for General Ahdab. Some Palestinians also appeared to be backing him.

There was no sure sign, however, of how many troops the general had behind him. Much is no firm figure of how much of the 18,000-man Lebanese Army remains intact after the nine months of fighting and the wave of desertions by Moslem soldiers after the cease-fire of Jan. 22.

Army Backing Cited

Holding a news conference yesterday at the white, colonnaded Military Court in western Beirut, General Ahdab announced that he had the backing of Lebanon's army commander, Maj. Gen. Hanna Saed, who is a Christian.

The general said also that he intended to lift the state of emergency that he proclaimed along with the military takeover of Lebanon. The reason, he said, is to encourage the country's politicians to select a civilian successor to Mr. Franjeh.

The general had demanded that both the President and the Government headed by Prime Minister Rashid Karami resign in 24 hours and that the Parliament meet in seven days to select a new President.

"It's not a coup," the general said in his news conference.

NIGERIA EXECUTES 30 FOR COUP ROLE

Ex-Defense Minister Among Them—Britain Is Asked to Extradite Gowon

By The Associated Press

LAGOS, Nigeria, March 12 — The Nigerian Government announced today that the former defense minister and 29 others had been put to death for their part in last month's attempted coup, in which the chief of state was assassinated.

The Government also said that it was calling on Britain to extradite the former head of state, Gen. Yakubu Gowon, to defend himself against charges that he helped plan the coup attempt. The general is a student at Warwick University in England.

During the attempt to overthrow the Nigerian Government on Feb. 13, the head of state, Gen. Murtala Ramat Muhammed, his driver, an aide and a provincial governor were shot to death.

A total of 125 people were arrested in connection with the uprising. Forty were released, but 32, among them the defense minister, Maj. Gen. I. D. Bisalla, received death sentences yesterday.

There were conflicting reports on how many of the 32 condemned were put to death. Some announcements over the Lagos radio put the figure at 30, others at 32.

The inclusion of Defense Minister Bisalla among the condemned surprised many Nigerians. He was widely believed to have acted with his military colleagues when they overthrew the government of

Kentucky Mine Toll Is 26 As 11 Die in Second Blast

By WAYNE KING
Special to The New York Times

WHITESBURG, Ky., March 12 — Eleven men were killed last night in the second of two explosions in a mine near here within three days, bringing the toll to 26.

Federal safety officials, fearful of still further blasts, predicted that it would be days before the bodies of the 11 could be removed from the still gaseous mine shaft.

A 20-man rescue party, lowered 360 feet down a concrete-ventilation shaft today into the murky, poisonous air of the Scotia Coal Company mine, found the 11 bodies, including those of three Federal mine safety officials. The rescue party was immediately withdrawn, leaving the bodies where they lay.

The 11 men had volunteered

CAREY WOULD CUT SOME CITY TAXES

Calls for Study by Rohatyn to Weed Out Levies That Companies Here Flee

By MICHAEL STERNE

Governor Carey yesterday asked Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, to make a thorough study of the city's tax structure to see what could be done to lower "counterproductive" taxes that are driving jobs and companies out of New York.

The assignment broadens the scope of the economic development role the Governor gave to Mr. Rohatyn and the Assistance Corporation on Monday, when he asked them to develop specific proposals for "the economic restoration of the City of New York."

Mr. Carey refused to specify what taxes might be the targets of the study, but economists, business leaders and public officials have cited the stock-transfer tax, the commercial occupancy tax, the sales tax on machinery, equipment and energy, and a real-estate assessment tradition that puts a heavier burden on commercial than on home properties as additional to the cost of doing business that make New York uncompetitive with other communities.

In announcing the new assignment for Mr. Rohatyn at the conclusion of a meeting of the State Emergency Financial Control Board, the watchdog over the city's tangled fiscal affairs, Mr. Carey said the goal was "a balanced revenue system as part of the economic

Delhi Takes Control Last State Foes Ruled

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

DELHI, March 12 — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's first today assumed direct control over the western state of Gujarat, which has been the last bastion of opposition to the new political order that she has brought to India in the last eight months.

The imposition of so-called President's Rule—direct rule of the state from New Delhi—means that all 22 of India's states are now controlled one way or another by Prime Minister Gandhi's Congress Party, which is also dominant at the national level.

The order issued here tonight under the Constitution followed the defeat of Chief Minister Babubhai Patel's state government in a state assembly vote. After the vote today, Mr. Patel, in accordance with standard parliamentary practice, resigned on behalf of his government, a shaky nine-month-old coalition of five political parties that had been united by little other than their opposition to Mrs. Gandhi and her party.

Defeat Was Expected
"No citizen of Gujarat will shed a tear," said Hitenra Desai, the state Congress Party president, who is expected to take over as chief minister if his party can gain enough strength from defections to form a government.

The defeat of Mr. Patel's government had grown more and more likely in recent weeks, because of defections from its ranks. Crossing the floor to join what had been a Congress Party minority in the state assembly, the defectors were encouraged to make the switch by the widening gulf between the alliance they were deserting and the even more powerful Gandhi Government in New Delhi.

Manubhai Kotadia, a former supporter of Mr. Patel, explained his move this way: "We are joining the Congress

The Mayor, and consequently his political lieutenants and huge cadre of ward committeemen and precinct captains, are more intent on gaining control of as many of Illinois' 168 Democratic convention delegates as possible to give him a broker's role long after the memory of Tuesday's "beauty contest" has faded from voter minds.

State Unit Sees Possibility Of Bronx Terminal Fraud

By JOHN L. HESS

The State Select Committee on Crime asserted yesterday that there was prima facie evidence of fraud in the leasing of the Bronx Terminal Market and that the law firm of Patrick J. Cunningham, the Democratic state chairman, had acted as an agent in the transaction.

Senator Ralph J. Marino, chairman of the committee, said he had information to the effect that city officials might have been criminally forced to violate their trust or had done so willfully and feloniously in awarding the lease in 1972 and amending it in 1973.

"This committee has also learned," he said, "that Kenneth Patton [the former Economic Development Administrator] telephoned high officials of the city administration to report his staff's recommendation that he not sign the lease. After this telephone conversation, Mr. Patton executed the lease in the form to which his staff had objected."

The "high officials" were not identified. Mr. Patton, who is now president of the Real Estate Board of New York, declined to comment. Mr. Cunningham has declined to discuss the transaction, or matters involving him with Maurice H. Nadjar, the special state prosecutor.

Senator Marino, a Nassau County Republican, made the allegations in an affidavit replying to a motion by the Arol Development Corporation, the

Gulf's Ex-Lobbyist Is Indicted on Gifts

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 13 — The former chief lobbyist in Washington for the Gulf Oil Corporation was indicted by a Federal grand jury today on two felony counts of making illegal campaign contributions.

Claude C. Wild Jr., the lobbyist, was indicted for making illegal contributions to the 1972 and 1974 primary election campaigns of Senator Daniel K. Inouye, Democrat of Hawaii, and Senator Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia.

Senator Nunn, in a statement read by an aide, said he personally received no money from Gulf or Mr. Wild and that a thorough investigation by his campaign finance officials had

CITY TO END ITS AID TO 4-YEAR SCHOOLS AT CITY U. IN 1977

Beame Tells Control Board
That $140 Million Budget
Would Be Shifted to State

PART OF NEW AUSTERITY

Proposal Increases Chance of Greater Role for Albany and End of Free Tuition

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

The Beame administration said yesterday that it would cut off all aid to the City University's 10 senior colleges as of July 1977 and that this $140-million-a-year responsibility would be left in the hands of the state.

First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti explained the timing and extent of the city's intention after a meeting of the Emergency Financial Control Board, the state's panel overseeing the city's fiscal affairs. He said the financing cutoff would be part of the city's revised austerity plan to be submitted to the Control Board and was within the city's fiscal powers.

If the city is able to accomplish this historic retreat as totally as the Mayor wants, it could mean a major new role for the state in running the city's senior colleges as well as the increased likelihood of changes in the current free-tuition policies.

Major Turning Point

The action, which the Mayor's aides say is unavoidable, would be a major turning point in the city's traditional insistence on running its own university, and still another measure of how far the fiscal crisis is altering the city. It would not affect the university's nine community colleges.

Mr. Zuccotti offered details end emphasis of earlier statements from Mayor Beame that some officials assumed were vague bargaining tactics. But Mr. Zuccotti said that the fund cutoff was a hard-and-fast decision and that it was legal under the State Constitution.

A spokesman for Governor Carey said the city's decision, which will be part of a revised austerity plan to be submitted to the Control Board, which is headed by the Governor, had been neither accepted nor rejected in yesterday's private board discussions.

Compromise Expected

Clearly, Mr. Zuccotti's move had advanced the complicated negotiations already under way over the future of the City University, one Control Board source said. But the issue remained far short of the compromise solution that many officials predict: an increased state role in the university as well as the imposition of tuition.

Privately, some key state officials have conceded that the

Syphilis Vaccine Is Tested After Bacterium Is Grown

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

The bacterium that causes syphilis has been grown in a test tube for the first time and then used to develop an experimental vaccine against the potentially fatal venereal disease, a team of researchers in Florida reported yesterday.

Injections of the experimental vaccine into rabbits have given promising results, according to the investigators from the Medical Research Institute of the Florida Institute of Technology in Melbourne.

The team cautioned that the vaccine must be tested further in rabbits, chimpanzees and other animals over a period of years before it can be injected into humans under experimental conditions.

Ultimately, immunization against syphilis might become as standard as the immunizations now given against measles, polio, and other common diseases. Dr. Ronald H. Jones, the Florida research-here, as they do in the white quarters of cities.

Most of the farmers have provided bars, at which the blacks can drink "African beer," a special brew, on weekends and buy sports equipment from the profits.

"Seventy-five percent of them are drunk Saturday. I don't know too much about their customs," said Colleen Nicolle, who, like her husband, is proud of coming from Rhodesian pioneer stock.

Hatred Among the Young
But a young man doing his military service in the para-military police said most of the blacks hated the whites here.

The police call the villages "keps" and lock their gates from 6 P.M. until 6 A.M. The houses are like those in the Africans' old villages, the policeman said, but crowded together in great numbers.

Deputy Minister Edward Sutton-Pryce declared yesterday that all such population moves had been voluntary and would continue to be so.

"We live a lot better than the Africans do, there's no two ways about it," said Mr. Nicolle.

The rise in terrorism has begun to interfere with leisure activities, but people are determined not to abandon their way of life.

Mrs. Nicolle said they never locked their place until a shop burglary last Sunday, and added that they did not have a house door that could be locked.

The Government has installed an alarm system in every farmhouse that sets off a siren in the police barracks in this one-street town.

The farmers of this region are solidly behind Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's Rhodesian Front, a party slow in softening its notion of white supremacy.

"Agriculture is a very complicated organization now," Mr. Nicolle said. "Would they be able to keep up what we've built? There are some very educated black men, but not enough."

"It's very worrying," he mused, reflecting the prevalent ambiguities and doubts.

"If black majority rule comes, I can't see how it would work. I would try, but I don't see how it would work."

U.S. Will Continue Curb On Loans to South Africa

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 12—The Ford Administration has decided to continue the 12-year ban on loans to South Africa by the Export-Import Bank, despite heavy pressure by American business interests and a group of conservative Congressmen, according to State Department and White House officials.

The officials reported that while the issue remained "under review" in a formal sense, the ban would "undoubtedly" stay in effect, even when the review is completed.

The issue assumed a critical nature in late January when 21 conservative Senators sent a letter to President Ford saying the ban on loans to South Africa should be re-examined because it tended "to limit our influence in South Africa."

This view was sharply opposed in the State Department and other branches of the Government, where it was argued that favoring South Africa, dominated by a white minority, at this time would have a disastrous impact on United States policy toward black Africa.

South Africa has become increasingly isolated in the wake of the takeover of Angola by forces backed by Soviet arms and Cuban troops.

The ban on loans to South Africa by the Export-Import Bank—an agency of the Government whose purpose is to facilitate American trade through loans, loan guarantees and insurance—was instituted as a signal of opposition to that country's policy of discrimination against its black majority.

The ban was not absolute, for American companies have been permitted to obtain loan guarantees and loans of up to $2 million on transactions with South Africa.

But American-South African business interests recently sought loans and guarantees on deals reportedly involving nearly $2 billion in investments linked principally with a plant in South Africa for the gasification of coal.

A South African Government corporation has sought a $225 million loan and a guarantee on another $225 million for the coal-to-gas facility.

State Department officials said the decision to continue the ban was made easier by the stand taken by a number of liberal members of the Senate and the House of Representatives who sent letters to President Ford last week urging him not to shift policy toward South Africa.

The first letter, drafted by Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, and Senator Dick Clark, Democrat of Iowa, was co-signed by six other Senators and sent to the White House last Thursday.

The Senators' letter observed that this was a "critical time" in the evolution of southern Africa. The other letter said with regard to the possible lifting of the ban: "We believe that the damage to our relationship with other African nations which have long resisted apartheid would be substantial."

Meantime, an Administration official said that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was currently "examining options" regarding a Congressional proposal that he visit South Africa next month.

"Probably Won't Go"
"He probably won't go," the official said, "because the only thing he could do is go down there and give them a 'whopping on the arse.'"

The Administration official said that United States action of southern African issues for the rest of the year would probably be "largely hortatory" because of the inability of the Administration to play a role in Angola following a Congressional cutoff of American assistance in December to two pro-Western factions in the Angola conflict.

SOUTH AFRICA FORCE QUILTS ANGOLA AREA

PRETORIA, South Africa, March 12 (Agence France-Press)—South African troops have evacuated part of the border area in southern Angola that they have occupied since last year, it was announced here tonight.

South African forces have withdrawn from the town of Pereira d'Alca, the site of a refugee camp in southern Angola, about 30 miles north of the South-West African border, Defense Minister Pieter W. Botha said.

He explained that the withdrawal had been decided after all the refugees in southern Angola whom the Portuguese authorities had found acceptable for repatriation had left Angola.

It appeared, however, that other South African forces remained on Angolan soil, close to the South-West African border, where they are guarding the Ruacana-Calueque hydroelectric complex, 15 miles north of the border, and remaining of liberal members of the

DOMAINE DE LA ROMANÉE - CONTI

AN HISTORIC WINE EVENT takes place on April 1st. This date marks the arrival, after two years of eager anticipation by wine lovers everywhere, of the remarkably great 1973 and 1972 vintages produced at the legendary vineyards of the DOMAINE DE LA ROMANÉE-CONTI. We feel we should tell you about it now so you can order promptly before its arrival since the pitifully small shipment will soon be spoken for. We quote only case prices below, but each of these wines is also available by the bottle. Order now—we will deliver during the first week in April.

THE 1973 VINTAGE is rich, of glorious fruit and style, maturing relatively quickly thus making them delicious and ready for immediate drinking, yet retaining all the elements which indicate a reasonably long life. On the other hand, THE 1972 VINTAGE produced complete, dramatic wines—deep in color with strong character, depth and fine balance. Slow to mature, the reward will be great for those wine lovers who are willing to wait. It will take at least twenty years for these '72s to reach their absolute apex.

A Jeroboam equals four regular bottles or eight half-bottles. We offer you both the giant and the standard sizes of CHATEAU GREY'S 1970—a superb Master of great vintage year produced by Georges Berthel, Chairman of Charrier-Europe. The wine is a real Bordeaux glory exhibiting a brilliant future. The price will delight you—only $1.50 each for the half-bottles, only $18.50 for the Jeroboam. Serve the half-bottle with 'dinner-for-two' and serve the Jeroboam when a larger number of appreciative friends gather.

BEST OF BEAUJOLAIS

CHATEAU DE LA CHAIZE celebrates its tri-centennial (it was constructed in 1676) coincidental with the American bi-centennial celebration. The chateau and vineyards are glorious. The whole story is told in the current April issue of Architectural Digest. The wine has consistently won gold awards year after year; most experts consider the superb BROUILLY the most remarkable example of Beaujolais in existence. It is featured in practically every great French restaurant of both Paris and New York. The 1974 vintage exhibits delicious fruit and finesse—it is just coming into its own and it is adding its touch of luster to the celebration of the 300 years of existence. The present owner, Le Marquis de Ronsay de Sales, is a descendant of Pere La Chaise, the confessor of Louis XIV, who built the chateau. Generation to generation of the family have remained dedicated to the excellence of the wine as witnessed by their BROUILLY 1974 available at $2.99 the bottle, $44.50 the case.

Dissident Beirut General

Abdel Aziz al-Ahdab

Special to The New York Times
BEIRUT, Lebanon, March 12—During the Lebanese civil war that began last April, the Moston officer who headed the Beirut garrison established special awards for citizens, both Moslem and Christian, who promoted peace instead of war.

Last night the officer, Brig. Gen. Abdel Aziz al-Ahdab, led a military takeover of Lebanon to prevent a collapse of the cease-fire of last Jan. 22 and to preserve the army against a wave of desertions by Moslems. "If I had not interfered," he said in statements published in Beirut newspapers today, "one army barracks after another would have fallen."

He referred to the capture of garrisons and outposts in seven towns in the south and north of Lebanon by rebel troops loyal to Lieut. Ahmed al-Khatib, who deserted shortly after the cease-fire and formed the so-called Lebanese Arab Army. General Ahdab, a 57-year-old member of the Sunnis, the largest of the Moslem sects, has a reputation as a disciplinarian with neither rightist nor leftist political leanings. He is said to command high respect in the ranks of the 18,000-man Lebanese Army, and Lebanese who know the army well say this is a principal reason why its officers chose him to be in the forefront of the current military move to take control of the country.

The general's friends say that if he had not begun a military career 37 years ago, he would have chosen journalism as a profession. Author of 6 Books
His education includes studies in journalism and English literature. He has written six books. "The Lebanese Army and Its Tradition," published last year, paints a glowing picture of the Lebanese Army, emphasizing discipline. Two of his books are about the Arab conflict with Israel and reflect a view that favors Lebanese participation in Arab plans for a firmer stand as long as this remains within the country's military and political abilities. He is also known to support closer cooperation with the Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon.

He has received a special award from the Lebanese Army for one of these books, "Lights on the Israeli Enemy," a discussion of the Israeli state and its armed forces. Abdel Aziz al-Ahdab was born in 1918 in the northern port city of Tripoli, a Moslem center.

He attended the military academy at Homs, now in Syria but then in a French mandate covering both Lebanon and Syria. He was graduated in 1939. Four years before Lebanon became independent and served in various military posts. He obtained additional military training in the United States, France, Britain and the Netherlands. General Ahdab's career has included tours of duty as military attaché at Lebanese embassies in Iraq, Egypt and Turkey.

Because of his reputation as a man of discipline, he was assigned to head the police force after factional fighting in 1958. He is credited with the creation of Squad 16, an elite force responsible for restoring law and order. As head of the Beirut garrison, he has been in command of 5,000 men.

General Ahdab is married and has four children, two of them by a previous marriage. On the wall of his office in Beirut's Military Court, where he met with reporters today, was a certificate stating that he was graduated in 1973 from the United States Army Military Police School at Fort Gordon in Georgia. Another certificate proclaims him an honorary member of the United States Army Military Police Corps.

reading from notes and sitting under an official photograph of President Franjeh. "It's a salvage movement. And, for God's sake, we have been patient for 10 months and if we had waited one more day there would have been uncontrollable bloodshed."

General Ahdab said at the news conference that his "fellow officers" had urged him to "save the army, the nation and the people." He was reported to have behind-the-scenes support of senior Christian officers as well as the unspoken backing of Syria and much of the Palestinian guerrilla movement.

About three hours before the general went on television to announce his coup Thursday night, a high-powered Syrian mediation team headed by Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam left the country by special plane. Mr. Khaddam took with him more than 50 Syrian officers who had been assigned here under the terms of the Jan. 22 cease-fire, negotiated by Mr. Khaddam. One account said that before leaving, the Syrian Air Force chief, Air Vice Marshal Najl Jamil, warned Mr. Franjeh that a coup was being planned.

"If they didn't back it," said one Western diplomat of the Syrians, "they certainly took no action to stop it."

Support for Deserters
In the past, the Syrians had supported Mr. Franjeh, but they were reported to have become exasperated with him and to have realized that their support was costing them here in public opinion.

General Ahdab has endorsed Syria's efforts to end the civil war, and it is considered probable that Mr. Khaddam will eventually return to Lebanon, possibly after President Hafez al-Assad completes his visit to France at the end of next week. Syrians hope ultimately to include Lebanon in a "northern front" around Israel, but they have scrupulously avoided giving Israel reasons to intervene here.

At the news conference, General Ahdab took the position that the deserter force headed by Lieut. Ahmed al-Khatib and called the Lebanese Arab Army had genuine grievances. The Lieutenant and his followers protest that the settlement that accompanied the Jan. 22 cease-fire did not go far enough toward satisfying Moslem demands for a greater share of the political and economic power wielded by the Lebanese Christian minority.

Therefore, the general said, the deserters should be pardoned and given a chance to rejoin the army ranks.

In the north a dissident major supporting Lieutenant Khatib's Lebanese Arab Army was reported last night to be leading an attack against Mr.

The Pro-Franjeh radio continued throughout the day to as-ert that General Ahdab's re-ports of growing military sup-port were "fictitious." The ge-ral's station recounted that President Kamal al-Assad, the speaker had come down from Baabda, of Parliament, was reported to the site of the President's res-idence to meet with Mr. Franjeh et aldoce, to report that the fami-Baabda, and one account said the head of state was that the President had insisted packing "his jewels and other on a two-thirds vote againsta riches stolen from the people," him before he would resign.

Heavy fighting was reported during the day yesterday from northern Lebanon. But with an apparent political stalemate prevailing in Beirut, the supporters of General Ahdab and of President Franjeh took to the air waves, with four different radio stations broadcast-ing varying versions of developments.

Two stations, one controlled by General Ahdab's partisans and another loyal to Mr. Franjeh, described themselves as "Radio Lebanon." The pro-Franjeh station occasionally put out coded messages like "The swallows are flying."

Two other stations are the Voice of Lebanon of the right.

Egypt Announces Arrest Of 12 More Libyan Agents

CAIRO, March 12 (AP)—Egyptian authorities today announced the arrest of 12 more Libyans as agents for sabotage and assassination and said that Libya's leader, Col. Muammar al-Qaddafi, was also trying to cause political trouble in Iraq. Security sources said the 12 were arrested Sunday and Monday on a stopover in Cairo on their way to Baghdad. The arrest raised to 42 the number of Libyans arrested as agents. The arrests were set off by the detention of 7 Libyans in Rome last weekend as they arrived from Cairo with weapons and hand grenades. Egyptian authorities said they had planned to kidnap a Libyan political exile scheduled for the same flight but who was not aboard the plane.

Peres Warns Israel Will Retain

If Beirut Changes Raise

Special to The New York Times
TEL AVIV, March 12—Israeli soldiers and farmers on the northern frontier were on alert today as Defense Minister Shimon Peres warned that Israel would have to react if its border security was affected by the action yesterday of a general in Lebanon to seize power in Jerusalem.

Concert in Jerusalem was mainly over a possibility that Syria might exploit the chaos in Lebanon to take over the country. Israelis also feared the situation in Lebanon might give Arab guerrilla bands a free hand for raids across the border. The Lebanese Army during the civil war reportedly abandoned its first-line positions facing Israel and part of its second line to consolidate its forces farther back.

Sympathy here has been overwhelmingly with the Christians in the Lebanese civil war and the Government has invited refugees to seek asylum in Israel.

A leading dove in Parliament, Yosef Sarid, said today he had urged high Israeli officials to permit Israeli troops to enter southern Lebanon briefly to rescue Christians threatened with "genocide."

"A Passive Observer"
But Israel's official position as affirmed today by Mr. Peres was that the conflict across the border was an internal affair and that Israel would be "a passive observer" unless its own security was affected.

While incursions from Lebanon declined since the civil war started last April, Israelis maintained they must watch developments closely because the situation was unpredictable.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, addressing volunteer workers in military installations, said last night that Israel could be confronted "with problems difficult to foresee."

The Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Security Committee discussed the situation today, after a briefing by the chief of intelligence, Maj. Gen. Shlomo Gazit. The meeting was behind closed doors.

An Opposition member of the committee, Hazim Landau of Likud, said later that Brig. Gen. Abdel Aziz al-Ahdab, who proclaimed the takeover in Beirut last night and Lieut. Ahmad al-Khatib, who leads the dissident Lebanese Arab Army were both Moslems identified with Syrian aims but not necessarily instigated by Damascus.

Accordingly, he asserted that

SINGER GIVES REPRIMANDS TO 2

Aides Disciplined for Having Disclosed Secret Deast Conversations

BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 12—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has officially reprimanded two of his closest State Department associates for having disclosed without specific authorization excerpts from Kissinger's secret conversations with Middle East leaders. Officials were disciplined for an "error in judgment" in releasing material from secret memorandums of conversation with R. F. Sheehan, who wrote an article in the current issue of Foreign Policy magazine on Mr. Kissinger's diplo-maty. Secretary has acknowledged giving general approval to aides to help Mr. Sheehan in writing project, but he said that he was "thunderstruck" when he saw the material from the records of his conversations with Arab and Israeli leaders. Kenneth S. Eagleburger, Deputy Secretary for Management, who conducted the disclosure, said he was at a conference today with Alfred L. Atherton Jr., Joint Secretary for Near East and South Asian Affairs, and took full responsibility for having provided the material and had been "severely reprimanded" by Mr. Kissinger. Mr. H. Saunders, who is Atherton's former deputy and now head of the State Department Intelligence and Communications Division, was given a reprimand, Mr. Eagleburger said, because he had furnished material to Mr. Sheehan without Mr. Atherton's approval.

The effect expected from the reprimands, which will be placed in the two men's personnel files, will have little effect on their careers, State Department officials said.

Mr. Atherton, who is 54 years old, is a highly regarded diplomat. Both he and Saunders, who is 45, have been closely involved in Mr. Kissinger's step-by-step Middle East diplomacy.

An inquiry and the reprimands were unusual, particularly since Mr. Kissinger had named Mr. Sheehan, a Harvard fellow at Harvard and an expert on Arab affairs, as the source of the information. ### India Takes Over Last Opposition State to enable formation of a Congress government in Gujarat, which is necessary to insure cordial relations between the state and the center."

Like most states in India, Gujarat had traditionally been in the hands of the Congress Party; in fact, as the birthplace of Mohandas K. Gandhi, who was the inspiration of the Congress back in pre-independence days, when it was a freedom movement, the state had been a party stronghold.

Mr. Patel's coalition government came into power, defeating the Congress Party, only last June, after a campaign in which Mrs. Gandhi's alleged hand across the textile-producing state, which is the size of New England, with a population of 30 million.

The defeat of the Prime Minister's party then happened to coincide with a court verdict against her in an unrelated election case. Together, the two events helped create the tumultuous mood that led to the imposition of the sweeping state of emergency across India two weeks later, with the suspension of civil liberties and the arrest of thousands of anti-Government figures.

"Because the state government opposed the emergency strictures, they have never been enforced with much vigor in Gujarat. The press has been freer there in most of India, and there have been open protest meetings, some addressed by the chief minister himself."

"The people of Gujarat are angry at what the central Government has done," Mr. Patel told a rally of 10,000 people there last summer, in a typical show of defiance.

Last to Fall

Now, presumably, the stern order that has settled upon the rest of India will come to Gujarat as well, as it did to Tamil Nadu—the other state last month, after the central Government dismissed the state government there and imposed direct rule from New Delhi.

In Tamil Nadu, the southern state formerly known as Madras, hundreds of arrests followed the imposition of so-called President's rule. Opposition meetings stopped, and posters praising the central Government and Mrs. Gandhi were hastily slapped up to replace the placards condemning her.

The defeat of the government in Gujarat today came on a vote relating to the state budget, an issue of sufficient significance to bring down a government in the parliamentary system. With 54 Congress Party members supported by five independents, the vote against Mr. Patel's government was 59 to 87. Two of the 179 assembly members were absent, and the speaker did not vote.

Earlier Presidential Rule

President's Rule has been invoked in a number of states in the past, for various reasons, and for various periods of time.

Section 358 of the Constitution authorizes the President to impose direct rule on a state if the governor reports that he "is satisfied that a situation has arisen in which the government of the state cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution."

Gujarat was under President's Rule in the year immediately preceding Mr. Patel's election last summer, because the state government had been dismissed in a period of turmoil marked by food riots and student demonstrations against inflation and official corruption.

Nigerians Execute 30 for Role in Coup

General Gowon last July 29, forcing him into exile.

General Bisilla's elevation to defense minister after the coup was seen as a demonstration of his colleagues' trust in him. He was commander of an infantry division toward the end of the two-and-a-half-year Nigerian civil war that ended Jan. 15, 1970, and he was said to have distinguished himself both as a military commander and in his postwar efforts at conciliation. A second surprise in the list of the condemned was the omission of Lieut. Col. Bukar Suka Dimka, who was said to have openly led the Feb. 13 coup. He was finally tracked down by the police last Friday and arrested on charges of treason and murder.

The new chief of Nigeria's defense staff, Brig. Musa Yarduah, said those who had tried to overthrow the Government did so because the Government was planning major manpower cuts in the army. The Nigerian Government is now headed by Lieut. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo.

Thousands Look On

General Bisilla and the 31 others who were condemned, only one of them a civilian, were found guilty by a special military board of inquiry.

They reportedly were shot by an army firing squad last night in the seaside suburb of Victoria Island, which was said to have been jammed with thousands of people who had arrived to watch the execution.

The trials of those still held are due to continue.

Besides General Bisilla, the executed military men were said to range in rank from warrant officer to colonel.

The civilian was identified as Abdulkarim Zakari, a radio journalist who was said to be a relative of General Gowon's wife.

Brigadier Yarduah charged that General Gowon had invited Colonel Dimka to London while the colonel was in Madrid on official business. General Gowon told Colonel Dimka to get together with General Bisilla, initiating the plot, Brigadier Yarduah said. General Gowon has denied any knowledge of the coup attempt.

Colonel Questioned

Colonel Dimka was reportedly being interrogated about General Gowon's possible connection with the plot.

Brigadier Yarduah defended the planned cuts in the armed forces, saying 80 percent of Nigeria's defense budget now goes for salaries, making it hard for the nation to equip and train its unwieldy forces. He said that preliminary planning for the cuts began in 1972 and that most proposals were known during General Gowon's tenure. Those to be removed from the army are to be absorbed in the police, customs, and prison services.

Lagos Cites 'Confessions'

LONDON, March 12 (Reuters)—The Lagos radio said today that the 30 people executed yesterday "made confessions and left messages for their relations" before being shot.

The broadcast reported that security men had some difficulty in keeping the thousands of spectators under control.

"After the execution, the crowd chanted in support of the Federal Government," the broadcast added.

Some broadcasts said the condemned were put to death in groups of 15 at separate sites; by separate firing squads. However, there also were some conflicting announcements. Other broadcasts said a total of 32 were put to death.

Indiana Execution Postponed

LEBANON, Ind., March 12 (UPI)—The execution of Charles R. Martin, a convicted murderer who was scheduled to be electrocuted next Monday, was postponed indefinitely today, Judge Paul H. Johnson Jr. of Boone Superior Court granted the indefinite stay on the grounds that the United States Supreme Court has cases before it testing the constitutionality of state death penalty laws. Mr. Martin, who is 33 years old, was convicted of kidnapping and killing Kathy Wylie, 19, of Gaston, Ind.

 MAIL NO-RISK COUPON TODAY

Here's one of the most exciting offers we've ever made... the very first in a series of beautiful genuine porcelain bells to be issued by American Treasury! It's the very first masterpiece in Copenhagen Blue Bells honoring Currier & Ives.

The entire likeable surface of this lovely bell depicts the Currier & Ives original of "Homestead in Winter." Each limited edition bell is trimmed in 22 karat gold... and bears the American Treasury Hallmark number on its inner surface! The handle has a 22 carat "gold band," our exclusive design. Each issue in this rare series will illustrate a different Currier & Ives classic! This valuable limited edition "collector's choice" bell is 5 1/2 inches high, can be displayed to beautify your home or table, glass case, elegant or bookshelf.

Buy-back Guarantee for 5 Years! You know your Limited Edition Currier & Ives Bell can't go down in value, for we put in writing that we will buy it back anytime within the next 5 years, and you will receive a certificate guaranteeing this with your bell!

A truly limited edition. Act now! Hurry — your order must be received by July 4, 1976. All orders received after that date will be returned, since only enough bells to satisfy the orders received before the cut-off date will be manufactured.

Your order qualifies you to collect other bells in the series as they are offered. Your order is for this bell only — you will not receive any others unless you specifically order them. There is a good reason for this — Your bell is not finished, hallmarked and numbered until your order and payment are received! It is literally made to order for you!

Hurry... order yours right now for the unheard-of low price of $14.95 plus $1 postage, insurance and handling!

Saint Laurie, a fine men's clothing manufacturer for 62 years is trying something brand new. New for them. New for the industry.

Saint Laurie sells their fabulously tailored suits to some of the most expensive stores in the country.

They will continue to sell to stores in New York, but not under the Saint Laurie label, and offer their vast collection... direct to the consumer.

More and more of the most sophisticated people in town are discovering Saint Laurie. In fact, since we introduced this unique method of selling, we have sold more Saint Laurie suits than the largest retailer sells of its leading brand.

At the factory, our suits range from $112 to $183. If you're used to wearing expensive clothes, have an eye for exquisite tailoring, and styling you'll immediately recognize the best men's suit value in New York.

If you like, you can still pay up to $275 for a Saint Laurie classic American, or European cut suit in some other city.

PACT WITH POLES RATIFIED IN BONN

It Provides for the Return of 125,000 Ethnic Germans

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BONN, March 12—A treaty that provides for the emigration of up to 125,000 ethnic Germans from Poland was unanimously ratified today by the West German Parliament after a week of tense round-the-clock negotiations between Warsaw and Bonn.

The treaty is the latest in the "eastern policy" series enacted by Chancellor Willy Brandt seven years ago to relax tensions in Central Europe. But ministers of the Communist Government in the east remains strong here, and "detente" is an election year issue.

The conservative Christian Democrats had threatened to veto the treaty unless Chancellor Helmut Schmidt got binding assurances that the others could leave Poland too. The Christian Democrats maintained the threat right up to today's crucial vote in the upper house of Parliament, where the conservatives have a 26-to-15-vote majority.

Trade Credit Part of Pact
Mr. Schmidt, who negotiated the agreement with Poland's Communist Party leader, Edward Giersek, last August, looked pale and drawn today as he warned that a rejection would paralyze West German foreign policy until the October elections, and undermining the foundation of West Germany's reconciliation with her historic enemies in Eastern Europe.

The agreement provides for the emigration of 120,000 to 125,000 ethnic Germans from Poland over the next four years, in return for a long-term low-interest trade credit of $400,000.

West Germany also agreed to pay an indemnification of $550,000 covering pension claims of Polish citizens who worked for German companies or government agencies during the Nazi occupation before 1945.

Estimates of the number of Germans within Polish borders after World War II range from 200,000 to 1.5 million. Mr. Schmidt's conservative opponent, Gov. Helmut Kohl, said as today's debate approached that the Chancellor had left these people uncovered by "sloppy negotiating."

European Parliament Is Urging First Direct Election by May '78

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

STRAZBOURG, France, March 12—The nine-member European Parliament called today on Common Market heads of government to make sure that the first European elections take place by May 1978.

The date for the elections has become uncertain, particularly after vocal political opposition in France. It is now generally agreed that unless a firm decision is made at the European summit meeting in April, it will be impossible to meet the deadline.

Nonetheless, the idea for direct elections by universal suffrage throughout the Common Market has now made such headway that politicians involved no longer doubt that a major step toward a political organization of Europe will take place.

Liberal Group to Meet
Liberal parties from the nine Common Market countries have already launched a European group, which is to hold its first meeting in Brussels next week and draw up a joint platform for the European electoral campaign.

Socialists said they were working on a joint manifesto, even though there are sharp differences in the political positions of the European Socialist parties.

Christian Democrats and conservatives have had more difficulty trying to form a united campaign bloc. But the West Germans said they were developing an alliance that would link British Conservatives, French Gaullists and German and Italian Christian Democrats and others.

The key issue to be settled by government leaders, according to a Dutch Socialist, Schelto Patjjo, who has drawn up the direct election accord, is the number of seats in the future Parliament.

Unequal Representation
In the existing European Parliament, whose members are appointed by Common Market legislatures, there are 198 representatives, with a minimum delegation of six for Luxembourg. This makes for unequal representation, giving Luxembourg one seat for about 50,000 people while West Germany, with 36 seats, has one for about 1.5 million.

There is general agreement that the future Parliament will have to be bigger, so that the smallest countries—Luxembourg, Ireland and Denmark—can have enough seats to make

BELGRADE COURT SENTENCES FOUR

Heavy Jail Terms Given to Alleged Plotters

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, March 12 (Reuters)—A court handed out heavy jail terms here today to four Yugoslavs charged with being Stalinists, including a former Deputy Prime Minister of Croatia, for allegedly plotting to overthrow the Government.

The sentences of up to 10 years were regarded by lawyers as a warning to any others who opposed Yugoslavia's economic policy.

The Belgrade district court trial was held behind closed doors.

Legal sources said the accused were alleged to have asked Yugoslav emigrants outside the country whether, when the Soviet Army would intervene in Yugoslavia if requested to do so by anyone in the country.

Judge Dragomir Nikolic, at a public court session after the trial, said the defendants had traveled to "certain countries" to ask emigrants whether "a certain country" would intervene here after Tito.

The trial was one of a series involving alleged Stalinists around the country. President Tito, who is 83 years old, said last October that "internal enemies wanted to break up Yugoslavia and dominate the people" and added that authorities would not hesitate to "put them out of action."

Sentenced today were: Miliivoje Stevanovic, 64, former editor of the official news agency Tanjug, 10 years; Dusan Brbic, former Deputy Prime Minister of the Croatian Republic, eight years; Radovan Zicic, 55, retired, eight and a half years; Ljubomir Radulovic, 55, retired, seven and a half years.

One reason for holding the trial behind closed doors was apparently to avoid straining relations with the Soviet Union by mentioning it in public, observers believed.

Another reason, they said, was to avoid the publicization of insults the accused were alleged to have made against the Yugoslav system and its leadership, including President Tito.

Judge Nikolic said today that Mr. Radulovic had "partly confessed," but that the other defendants denied all the charges.

The interior minister, Frajo Herjavec, said last December that 36 alleged Stalinists had been arrested in various parts of the country.

A group of 10 went on trial at Novi Sad last month, but proceedings were adjourned for two of them to undergo psychiatric examination.

Charges have also been brought against three alleged Stalinists at Split, on the Adriatic coast, it was announced Wednesday.

Nine others will stand trial at Banja Luka, central Yugoslavia, next Monday, according to legal sources.

WARSAW, March 12—Edvard Giersek, leader of the Polish Communist Party, said in a televised speech tonight that today's ratification by the West German Parliament of the new treaty showed that "reason and realism have conquered."

He spoke of the "strong activity" of Chancellor Schmidt and other West German politicians in promoting the treaty.

Mr. Giersek spoke in the western Polish city of Poznan, which at one time was part of Germany. His speech—delivered before an audience of local Communist leaders, farm managers and candidates for the forthcoming Polish parliamentary election—dealt mainly with agricultural subjects.

TRIAL IS SAID TO AID MADRID ARMY UNION

Special to The New York Times

MADRID, March 12—The trial and conviction of nine officers for conspiring to rebel will contribute to the growth of the clandestine Democratic Military Union within the Spanish armed forces, according to two of its spokesmen.

Two captives received foreign reporters in a hotel room at Las Palmas in the Canary Islands yesterday and predicted that arrests and repression of the union would continue "but this does not deter us." He said, "We are entering a period of intense recruitment obviously under the strictest secrecy."

The trial was held Monday and Tuesday in a barracks outside Madrid, and the military court gave sentences of two-and-one-half to eight years to the officers as members of the union. The sentences also included discharge from the service for seven of the nine.

"The Democratic Military Union now has its first martyrs," one of the officers said in Las Palmas. "The trial has in no way broken the union. Instead it will serve as a catalyst for the organization's growth."

Daley Views the Prime As Crucial to His Pow

Continued From Page 1, Col. 2 They have all become ha-ha' stories and he is as high today as he was two decades ago.

Among other things, he overcame the exposure of a burglary ring in the Police Department by his famous "kill" order to the police chief who allowed the assassination of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in 1968.

In 1974 he was hit by a stroke, prompting that his political career was over. He has since recovered from the stroke and is now a "police riot" as he has overthrown his own party in the 1972 Democratic convention.

In 1974 he was hit by a stroke, prompting that his political career was over. He has since recovered from the stroke and is now a "police riot" as he has overthrown his own party in the 1972 Democratic convention.

The impact on his of many instances of corruption, bribery and the like, has not been a major factor in his political survival. Last year, despite the fact that the machine was in a state of disarray, he won the election with about 78 per cent of the vote.

The Old-Time Pol The anonymous, class stalwarts who machine alive still to the personal touch of old-time politics and cinct captains. They are immune to the smiles and sticky promises of the new machine.

Mr. Daley wants to go to the Democratic convention with a sizable bloc of votes and negotiate once again from strength. He has enjoyed the kingmaker's role in the past and he is said to be anxious to blot out the last trace of the ignominy he and his followers suffered in 1972 when they were ejected from their party's convention.

A Daley associate was asked the other day why the machine was not backing Mr. Shriver in the preference primary if only as a sop to a man with connections to the Kennedy family, a family the Mayor admires, as well as one who had lived in Chicago for a number of years.

"That takes an effort," the associate said, "and it might detract from the main things. There are too many other machine concerns to clutter the situation up with the preference primary."

For years the machine has confounded experts—has drawn barbs from liberal professionals and has kept the unstinting support of the city's working class.

Mr. Daley has had more "last hurrah" stories written about him than perhaps any other politician in America.

Ford Upholds Kissinger Against Reagan's Attacks

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, March 12—President Ford emphatically endorsed the diplomatic conduct of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger here today and said he regretted efforts by Ronald Reagan to make foreign policy an issue in their contest for the Republican Presidential nomination.

The President made both points while echoing, in considerably more muted terms, the spirited defense Mr. Kissinger made yesterday in Boston of Administration policies under attack by both liberal and conservative politicians.

"Our foreign policy is moving forward constructively," Mr. Ford told students at Wheaton College, in a Chicago suburb. "I would not, under any circumstances, want Henry Kissinger to quit—period."

A sudden storm, which the authorities here said might have been a tornado, crossed the President's path as he motored this afternoon from the Loop to a motel near O'Hare International Airport. The President and his party were not affected by the storm, but it caused extensive damage to another nearby motor hotel and other businesses.

The President's most forceful declaration of support of Mr. Kissinger followed frequent declarations by Mr. Reagan that he would quickly replace the Secretary of State if he were to win the White House.

Mr. Kissinger said yesterday in a Boston speech that critics of warmer Soviet-American relations—of whom Mr. Reagan and Senator Henry Jackson of Washington, a Democratic Presidential contender, are the prime examples—are making "erroneous and reckless allegations" that the United States was becoming a second-rate power.

In an appearance today before the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, Mr. Ford made the same point but with far less bite. Asked by a member of the council whether foreign policy might play a decisive role in the 1976 election, Mr. Ford replied:

"Well, I do regret that foreign policy has been injected into both the primary as well as potentially in the Presidential election. When there are deep divisions over foreign policy, Mr. Ford said, 'our allies begin to question what direction America will go.'"

"Adversaries are tempted to exploit, or to seek to exploit what they seem to think are weaknesses," he added. In his address to the Council on Foreign Relations, the President sought both to dispel doubt about the strength and resolution of the United States and to display an attitude of caution and firmness about his approach to better relations with the Soviet Union.

Although he again expressed determination to seek an agreement with Moscow to limit strategic nuclear weapons, Mr. Ford gave his most pessimistic forecast to date about the prospect for an agreement this year. "As you know, we are still negotiating the details of such an agreement," he said, "and I cannot say when—or even whether—this will be completed."

The President said that every President since the dawn of the nuclear era sought to "stop this deadly duel" and that the negotiations with the Soviet Union were "the closest we have ever come."

But he added, "I will also say without hesitation that I will never agree to any such treaty or submit it to the United States Senate for ratification unless I am totally convinced that it is in the best interests of the United States and of the peace of the world."

In reply to a question from a member of his Chicago audience, the President also professed skepticism about recent statements in which the leaders of Communist parties in France and Italy said they were taking positions independent of Moscow's.

"We see evidence of the leaders of the Communist Party in France and the Communist Party in Italy attempting to dissociate themselves [from] the international Communist movement," Mr. Ford said. "I have to be somewhat skeptical of the sincerity of these positions."

Taken as a whole, Mr. Kissinger's and Mr. Ford's recent defenses of Administration diplomacy appeared designed to try to defuse the foreign policy issue on which Mr. Reagan has

A Secret Service agent struggling with an umbrella yesterday as he tried to protect Betty Ford from the rain during a campaign stop in Libertyville, Ill.

Kissinger Says He'll Shun Campaign

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 12—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told reporters today that he would not take "the political stump" in this election year. But he served notice on all opponents of President Ford, both parties, that he would continue to react strongly to criticism of the Administration's foreign policy.

Asked whether his speech in Boston yesterday, in which he struck out at all critics, indicated that he was now directly involved in the political race, Mr. Kissinger again insisted that "I will not enter the campaign and will not support candidates."

But he added, "When over a period of weeks a series of extreme charges are made, actually in both parties, then I feel I have an obligation to put before the public what the foreign policy of this Government is and to explain its rationale."

Mr. Kissinger held what amounted to an impromptu news conference in the lobby of the State Department as he bid farewell to Foreign Minister Yigal Allon, who had a working lunch and meeting with Mr. Kissinger today.

Mr. Allon, who just completed a tour of Latin America, said he held a general discussion with Mr. Kissinger on the Middle East diplomatic outlook, and repeated Israel's concern about the start of an American military supply relationship with Egypt.

Mr. Kissinger said that the Administration still intended to sell six C-130 military transports to Egypt, despite Israeli opposition, but that nothing else was contemplated at this time.

Some Senators have suggested that the sale be made through commercial channels and thereby avoid an open fight in Congress.

But when asked if the Administration would go "the commercial route," Mr. Kissinger said that "almost certainly" the sale would be done Government to Government, thereby meaning that a vote will be forced as Israeli supporters seek to kill the contemplated deal.

The Israelis have suggested that the next round of negotiations be held with Egypt, Syria and Jordan on "ending the state of war" with Israel. In return, Israel would return territory captured, but less than it would return if there was a genuine peace.

Mr. Allon said that it was too early to elaborate on this new approach, and Mr. Kissinger said the United States would raise it with various Arab leaders, King Hussein of Jordan arrives here on March 29 and will be the first to hold extensive discussions.

On politics, Mr. Kissinger seemed to aim part of his attack yesterday against Ronald Reagan, the Republican challenger, and Senator Henry M. Jackson, a Democratic co-leader, both of whom have been making frequent charges that the administration was losing ground to the Soviet Union.

"I will explain the foreign policy of the United States and, certainly, nonpartisanship cannot mean freedom of attack without any reply about the substance of our foreign policy," he said.

RIGHTS FOES FACED IN KENTUCKY MOVE

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 12—An attempt to rescind the ratification of the equal rights amendment to the Constitution was defeated today in Kentucky.

It was the fifth such defeat this year for opponents of the amendment, which would prohibit sex discrimination by Federal, state or local governments.

Advocates of the amendment had considered the Kentucky challenge the most serious of the recent attempts to rescind earlier ratifications of the amendment and, therefore, they expressed considerable optimism on the basis of the defeat.

Liz Carpenter, co-chairman of ERAmerica the new organization that is coordinating pro-ratification efforts, said that the action represents a major turning point across the country for the equal rights amendment.

Phyllis Schlafly, the head of Stop E.R.A., the coordinating group for opponents of the amendment, said there was "nothing momentous" about the Kentucky action.

She said that "rescission is obviously more difficult than ratification because it requires people to say publicly that they made a mistake, but the rescission movement grows all the time."

She said she did not know of any other states where a rescission vote was scheduled. The other states in which rescission efforts have been defeated this year are Idaho, New Mexico, South Dakota and Vermont.

Reagan and Aide in Illinois Denounce Ford Campaign

By JON NORDHEIMER Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, March 12—Ronald Reagan's campaign chairman in Illinois questioned today the integrity of President Ford and said he was unfairly using the White House to "buy" votes in the state's primary election next Tuesday.

Donald Totten, a Representative in the Illinois legislature, charged that the President had used "a pork barrel politics" in a way that manipulated the voting public and the news media.

Reagan's Comment "It's an actual buying of votes by outright bribery," Mr. Totten told a group of Republicans in suburban Itasca while introducing Mr. Reagan, a former Governor of California.

"This President says he has honesty and integrity, but I question the use of [these practices]," he added.

Mr. Totten later told news that Mr. Reagan's press secretary, Lyn Nozicker, had approved his remarks before delivery. When Mr. Nozicker was asked to confirm this, he declined comment.

When Mr. Reagan was asked whether he approved of Mr. Totten's statement, he replied that he would not have chosen the same words to describe the President's actions. But he did not dissociate himself from the statement.

Moreover, the Republican challenger clearly set the tone of escalated language all through a day of campaigning in the Chicago area.

At one point he declared the Ford forces were "lying through their teeth" by making claims that the Californian had expected victory in the New Hampshire and Florida primaries, which were won by the President.

At another, he said that the Ford campaign tactics were "the cheapest kind of politics."

When speaking directly about the President, however, Mr. Reagan chose his words carefully. On the suggestion of abuse of official power, he said: "He's running a campaign like an incumbent and using the power of the incumbency which I'm sure any incumbent would do. Much of it is based on promises. I'm running because I object to politics as usual."

During an interview on a late morning television program, Mr. Reagan complained that the President's advantages extended to news manipulation, and cited Mr. Ford's invitation to four Chicago television anchor men to interview him in the White House. The interview was televised over local stations yesterday.

When the interviewer, Phil Donohue, asked Mr. Reagan if he had asked for equal time from the four stations, the candidate's face went blank for a moment, and then was turned by chagrin into a smile. "That's a good idea," he beamed, and while the program continued Mr. Reagan's aides telephoned the local stations and were assured he could have equal time. The same anchor man—plus one anchor man from the Chicago public broadcasting station who had not been invited to the White House—interviewed the Californian later in the day.

public interest necessary to sustain such a venture. Governor Shapp declined to endorse any of his former op-ponents, but because much of his own strength in the primary here next month was expected to come from organized labor, he said he believed his withdrawal would be more benefi- cial to Senator Henry M. Jack-son of Washington than to any- one else.

It was from similar support (Mr. Jackson fashioned an unexpected plurality in the Massachusetts voting last week, and although it disap- peared in the Florida primary on Tuesday, his strong ties to labor might become a critical Shapp no longer a factor.

At any rate, Pennsylvania could now become a showdown state for Senator Jackson, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia—the Florida winner— Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona and George C. Wallace of Alabama.

The Pennsylvania primary is scheduled three weeks after the primaries in New York and Wisconsin on April 6, a gap in the grinding nomination process that should allow all the candidates time to concentrate on Pennsylvania without inter- ruption.

Moreover, it is precisely the sort of place—Northern, indus- trial, populous, ideologically diverse—in which all four men could test their mettle in a political laboratory unlike any of their previous meetings.

But, for Governor Shpp and the campaign workers who gathered about him today, such speculation was unimportant. Some of them wept as they listened to the short, stocky man quietly announce the demise of his campaign.

inclination to press his pursuit. He described his campaign as an effort to discuss substantive issues and to offer significant, programmatic solutions to many of the country's problems.

"But the coverage of me was putrid," Mr. Shapp said later in an interview. "The press in this country is just not interested at all in a candidate who wants seriously to raise important issues and problems. All the press wants is one candidate's reaction to another candidate's statement."

Seems Relieved His critique of the press was the only sign of bitterness in the Governor's terse announcement that he was quitting. Otherwise, he seemed relieved that it was over.

He said he had spent approximately $100,000 of his own money during his pursuit of the nomination, and had disclosed later that, with total expenditures of $700,000, the Shapp campaign was closing $80,000 in debt.

The Governor was the fourth Democrat to withdraw this year. Terry Sanford, the pres- ident of Duke University and former Governor of North Carolina, dropped out in January. Senator Lloyd Bentsen of Texas did the same after poor show- ings in the caucuses of Iowa, Mississippi and Oklahoma. He remains on the Texas ballot, however, as a favorite-son candi- date. Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana "suspended" his effort after similarly weak results in New Hampshire and Massa- chusetts.

In addition, Fred R. Harris, the former Oklahoma Senator, announced this last week that he was scaling down his cam- paign to an almost token level.

Others in Race That leaves the four who are still seen as major candidates, along with Sargent Shriver, who is still "assessing and reas- sessing" his chances, the Senator Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia and Senator Frank Church of Idaho, who is expected to begin an active pursuit of the nomi- nation later this month.

Governor Shapp's withdrawal coincided with the announce- ment in Ohio that a Presidential campaign committee for Sena- tor John Glenn, the former as- sistant, was being formed by that state's former Governor, Michael V. DiSalle.

Senator Glenn said he had authorized no such organiza- tion and had no intention of seeking the Democratic nomi- nation or the Presidency.

Brown in Primary SACRAMENTO, Calif., March 12 (AP)—Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. said today that he had withdrawn from a favorite-son candidate in the California primary.

The 37-year-old Democratic Governor ended months of speculation and queries from reporters by saying in an inter- view here: "I will name a steering committee Monday. I will take whatever steps are necessary to put my name on the ballot. It's a candidate, not a favorite son, a native son."

He said he had no plans to run in any other primaries. "I'm just running in California," he said. "That's enough."

Mr. Hutchison said he could not imagine the White House urging Republicans not to at- tend the session at the Con- nally ranch, as was reported in Washington.

Mr. Hutchison said he scheduled the meeting in early Feb- ruary and picked San Antonio for no other reason than it is "one of the greatest cities around."

He said that all the attention given to the event was because of the "glamour of the name John Connally." Mr. Connally did not attend Mr. Hutchison's news conference this afternoon.

Mr. Rosenbaum did not at- tend or was not on hand today. Mr. Hutchison said that repre- sentatives from 21 states had promised to attend the sessions.

PARLEY STIRS TALK ON CONNALLY ROLE

Republican State Chairmen of 19 States in Texas

By JAMES P. STERBA

SAN ANTONIO, March 12—Republican state chairmen and executive directors from 19 states arrived here today for what Ray Hutchison, the Texas Republican chairman, described as "every dull" meeting devoted to the Congressional election campaigns and not to fur- ther the Presidential or Vice- Presidential aspirations of former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas.

The chairman and directors are scheduled to meet tomor- row in closed sessions at the Floresville ranch of Mr. Con- nally. Mr. Hutchison said that "imaginative" news reports about it being a "secret strategy session" to put Mr. Connally into a race for national office had "turned the meeting into a 'media' event for the news- men rather than participants on hand."

Mr. Hutchison said that those attending would discuss "kind of dull subjects" and "sort of dull items" and "dull things" about the mechanics of running Congressional campaigns dur- ing a Presidential election year.

Richard M. Rosenbaum, the New York State Republican chairman, charged earlier that Mr. Hutchison had gone out- side the party structure in call- ing the meeting. He also ques- tioned why the sessions would be closed to the press and public.

Mr. Hutchison said that he had called the meeting, not Mr. Connally.

UDALL GETS MORE OF BAYH SUPPORT

Tries to Establish Himself as Top Liberal in State Race

By THOMAS P. RONAN

ROCHESTER, March 12—Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona picked up additional support today from former backers of Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana in his effort to mar- shal this state's liberal Demo- crats behind his drive for Presi- dential delegates in the April 6 primary.

The flow was not all in Mr. Udall's direction, however, be- cause some upstate Bayh candi- dates for delegate to the Democratic National Convention came out for Senator Her- bert H. Humphrey of Minneso- ta, an undeclared candidate.

At news conferences here and in New York, Mr. Udall pursued his objective of trying to establish himself as the only viable progressive candidate in the New York primary and to peg his chief opponents, Sena- tor Henry M. Jackson of Wash- ington and former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, as conserva- tives outside the mainstream of Democratic political thinking.

Joining the Udall cause to- day were Assemblymen G. O'Leary Koppell and Richard Gottfried and Councilman Carter Burden, who were on Bayh delegate slates before the Indian- ian suspended his cam- paign, and Assemblymen Charles E. Shumer and Mark A. Siegel.

Others who came over from the Bayh camp were Robert Abraham, Bronx Borough Presi- dent; Victor Gothbaum, executive director of District 37, Municipal Workers Union, and local officials of the Municipal Work- ers, the United Automobile Workers, the International Union of Electrical Workers, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, District 65 of the Re- tail, Wholesale and Distributive Workers Union and unions representing tunnel workers and motion picture operators.

Two Clubs Back Udall The Arizona also has been endorsed by two of the largest clubs affiliated with the liberal reform New Democratic Coalition—the Village Inde- pendent Democrats and the Lexington Democratic Club, both of which had backed Mr. Bayh.

Many of Mr. Udall's new supporters appeared at a news conference he held in New York before flying here for more news conferences, a meeting with the editorial board of the Gannett Newspapers, and the Democratic nomination if the

New Haven's Democrats Elect Black as the Party's Chairman

By MICHAEL KNIGHT

NEW HAVEN, March 12—A 41-year-old black man was unanimously elected Demo- cratic Party town chairman here last night, becoming the first black to hold the powerful political post in this or any other major city in Connecticut.

The election of William Jones at a party convention here marked the growing political importance of the black com- munity in this heavily Demo- cratic city of 130,000 people, where politics have tradition- ally revolved around ethnic loyalties and the seaway rival- ries of Italian-Irish factions.

The vote also marked the end of a 22-year reign by the former party chairman, Arthur V. Barbieri, an autocratic figure who liked to call himself the "party boss" and who ran the organization with a tight hand.

Mr. Jones, a City Alderman for six years, was elected by acclamation last night as a compromise "third force" can- didate acceptable to both the conservative Italian "loyalist" faction headed by Mr. Barbieri and the liberal Irish "anti- machine" faction headed by an insurgent Democrat, Mayor Frank F. Logue.

The voice vote came after Harold C. Donegan, a lawyer allied with the insurgent fac- tion, withdrew from the race after days of frantic behind-the- scenes hargaining touched off by a primary last week in which neither faction emerged with a majority of the 60 party committee votes.

Mr. Jones was greeted by a standing ovation after Mr. Donegan withdrew and after

The election of William Jones at a party convention here marked the growing political importance of the black com- munity in this heavily Demo- cratic city of 130,000 people, where politics have tradition- ally revolved around ethnic loyalties and the seaway rival- ries of Italian-Irish factions.

The vote also marked the end of a 22-year reign by the former party chairman, Arthur V. Barbieri, an autocratic figure who liked to call himself the "party boss" and who ran the organization with a tight hand.

Mr. Jones, a City Alderman for six years, was elected by acclamation last night as a compromise "third force" can- didate acceptable to both the conservative Italian "loyalist" faction headed by Mr. Barbieri and the liberal Irish "anti- machine" faction headed by an insurgent Democrat, Mayor Frank F. Logue.

The voice vote came after Harold C. Donegan, a lawyer allied with the insurgent fac- tion, withdrew from the race after days of frantic behind-the- scenes hargaining touched off by a primary last week in which neither faction emerged with a majority of the 60 party committee votes.

Mr. Jones was greeted by a standing ovation after Mr. Donegan withdrew and after planning for the future of the city.

The study will be done in conjunction with the Control Board and the city's Temporary Committee on City Finances headed by Owen McGovern, a former State Supreme Court Justice. It parallels one already under way on state taxes by the Governor's Economic Development Board.

The combined burden of city and state taxes on businesses is the highest in the nation, and is thought to be a major cause of the flight of jobs and enterprises from the city. Since 1969, the number of jobs in the city has declined by more than 500,000.

In an implicit recognition of that fact, Mr. Rohatyn said of his new responsibility that "the tax question has to be tied to the creation of jobs." He gave no details of his plans for the study, but pledged that "there aren't going to be any sacred cows."

New Ideas Sought

Mr. Rohatyn, a partner in the investment banking house of Lazard Freres, has emerged as something of a wunderkind of municipal finance since he took a role in the city's budgetary crisis last year. His selection Monday to head a new economic development drive for the city was seen as an attempt by the Governor to bring some new push and ideas in an effort that so far has had only limited success.

One of the most outspoken critics of the tax structure has been John S. Dyson, Mr. Carey's Commerce Commissioner who has pointed to the state and city income taxes, both of which hit businessmen with high incomes hard, as one of the reasons why corporate leaders have been moving themselves and their companies to Connecticut and New Jersey. Neither of these neighboring states has an income tax.

A recent study by Prof. Stephen E. Lile of Western Kentucky University found that the highest level of personal taxes per capita in the country was imposed in New York City. The study, which covered sales, home property, automobile and cigarette excise taxes as well as income taxes, also found that the city was the worst place to be in, in terms of the tax burden, for people of high incomes.

While the city ranked 21st in severity of the tax burden for families with incomes of $5,000 a year, it ranked 15th for those earning $7,500, 10th for those earning $10,000, 9th for those earning $17,500, 5th for those earning $25,000 and first for those with $50,000 a year or more.

Remedy Proposed

As a remedy, Mr. Dyson had proposed a gradual reduction of the state's steeply progressive rates.

The top rate, 15 percent, now applies to taxable incomes of $25,000 or more.

Mr. Rohatyn said he was still "at the beginning of the beginning of my thinking" on how to reform the tax structure, but he asserted that reducing the rate on any other group, or interest of a tax burden had to be coupled with finding other revenues somewhere else. "We have to consider social needs, the needs of the poor, of all sectors," he said.

Many public officials, while acknowledging that reducing the taxes on business would help the city's economy, have scouted the possibility of enacting such reductions at a time when the city and the state are struggling to close growing budget deficits.

The bond transfer tax, enacted last July to help the city through its budgetary difficulties, was repealed this year after it was found that bond dealers were moving to New Jersey to escape the tax. But this was possible because the project's yield from the tax was small, $25 million a year, and the actual yield was proving to be even less.

city would appear to have considerable leeway under the Constitution to withdraw from its traditional support of the City University's senior colleges.

The Governor's office, questioned about this point, replied that the administration's understanding was that "nothing requires the city of New York to support the senior colleges. Nevertheless, officials familiar with the issue expect that it will involve complicated rounds of negotiation and controversy, not only with the Control Board and the Governor, but also with the State Legislature.

One state aide outed that, as a rule of thumb, power follows financing in government, and thus the states role could be expected to increase in the university to the extent that it pays more direct aid.

The city's emphasis is on local tax-levy savings, and Mr. Zaccotti said the first $140 million to be realized would be one of the third-year assumptions of the austerity plan. He submitted a few weeks from now. Under the Control Board's supervision, the city is in the midst of a three-year task of cutting the expense-budget deficit by a billion dollars before mid-1978.

The Deputy Mayor said the city intended to continue its $70 million in annual assistance to the City University's two-year community colleges, since this was more clearly a local responsibility.

If the Mayor's plan goes through, Mr. Carey would have to find $140 million in future annual financing for the colleges. His own state budget is extremely tight, he noted, without commenting directly on the city's intention.

Carey Concedes Retreat

The Mayor's fiscal move was another sign that the city was gradually emerging from its passive role of last summer, when it had to accept various emergency state mandates as the price of avoiding default. Mr. Beame earlier had opposed the Governor's attempt to halve the state budget by imposing cuts in state aid to the city and other localities, a proposal that could cost the city $160 million annually, according to the Mayor.

The Governor, who flew here from Albany, where the state's budget is under intense negotiation, conceded that he had retreated from his insistence on cutbacks in local aid. He noted that "local aid will be relatively intact."

In discussing the City University, Mr. Carey emphasized the state's willingness to cooperate with the city, as well as the "intense negotiations" that have been underway for two months. But he gave no hint of his position or tactics in the coming bargaining.

At his side as he spoke was Commissioner of Social Services Stephen Berger, an administration troubleshooter, newly appointed by the Governor to be chief of staff at the Control Board.

In recent weeks, as the city has pleaded that its own ability to cut is limited and that Federal and state help must be extended, it has received expressions of sympathy from the Control Board's seven members—the Governor included. Thus, the future of the austerity drive will likely be more complicated politically.

Mr. Berger was asked to comment on the various fiscal issues, but he carefully replied that except for his current specialty of economizing on welfare he preferred to hold his tongue until he learned more.

Evers Students Upset by Kibbee's Plan

By DAVID VIDAL

"It has been causing me many sleepless nights," said Wesley Jackson, a junior at Medgar Evers College, commenting on a proposed reorganization of the college.

"I made myself a promise to finish school," he said. "I have only 20 credits to go. Now it scares me. Where are they going to put us all? What is going to happen to my benefits?"

A 26-year-old Air Force veteran who is the son of a postal worker and a nurse, Mr. Jackson is deeply troubled by a plan that he says "would be of great detriment to the students," three-fourths of whom, like himself, are black. Most of the students are women; about 90 percent work as well as study, and the average age of the students is 28.

The plan of Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, the university chancellor, for restructuring the university to save $80 million over the next three years would convert Medgar Evers, the university's newest senior college, into a two-year vocational-oriented institution.

Dr. Kibbee said Thursday at a City Council hearing that this move would save about $700,000 a year.

The Background

The school has a budget of $7.2 million and a full-time student body of 2,900 that is augmented by 600 part-time students, 600 in the adult evening division and 350 veterans spread throughout. It was opened in September 1971 on the site of the old Brooklyn Preparatory Academy at 1150 Carroll Street in Crown Heights in response to community pressure for a senior college that could ease the pressing educational and social needs of the sprawling area known as central Brooklyn.

That area includes Bedford-Stuyvesant, Crown Heights, Brownsville, East Flatbush and Park Slope. It is an area with the largest concentration of black residents in the country. Brooklyn College, in Flatbush, was the nearest senior college alternative available before the arrival of Medgar Evers.

For Mr. Jackson, who studies in $270 a month in veteran's benefits "that it took a lot of time, paperwork and effort to get," the chancellor's proposal would mean an abrupt end to a study plan that the Brooklyn-reared youth began nurturing "outside Tokyo. He was encouraged by a sister who graduated in accounting from Medgar Evers and went on to a successful career in private business and government.

An End to Dreams

"It wipes out the dreams, with one fell swoop, of the largest minority community in the country," said C. Johnson, a student.

The four-year accounting program would be eliminated along with others in public administration, nursing and teacher education—the only competency-based teacher-education program approved by the state, according to college officials.

The college was named after the Mississippi civil-rights leader who was shot to death in 1968. The founding resolution by the Board of Higher Education conceived of it as an experimental school that would offer two-year associate degrees and four-year baccalaureates in specific professional fields.

"Now we are being penalized for doing what we were specifically asked to do," said the president, Dr. Richard D. Trent. He said it was "ridiculous" to argue that some people have done—that the school's conversion to a two-year institution appears justified because of its predominant enrollment in the first two undergraduate years.

The schools officials reply angrily that the college has just completed its first four-year cycle, that enrollment has been increasing and is therefore weighed more toward the initial years and that even then the law requires that for every two four-year students there be five two-year students.

Most Want 4 Years

"Most of our students are poor and many find it impossible to study for a straight four years," said the dean of academic studies, Dr. Wendell E. Clement, but he added that nonetheless "70 percent of our students have indicated a desire eventually to take a four-year degree at Medgar Evers."

"That is our basic unique feature," he said. "Our courses are designed so that a student can work and study at the same time. The school is a model of this transfer program from a two-year to a four-year degree."

Half the school's graduates have also gone on to graduate studies, he added.

Dr. Don O. Watkins, dean of administration, also contests the underlying assumption that the City University would save money by changing Medgar Evers College.

"That's false," he asserted. "The only savings, if any, would occur as a result of the higher teaching load required in community colleges. Less than $500,000 would be saved."

He argues that this saving would be offset by higher "remediation" costs for students, whose individual costs would also rise, even as the college loses $500,000 in Federal and state grants because of its reduced status.

"Medgar Evers' costs per student are lower than the Graduate Center, City College and Richmond, and about the same

City Decision to Shut 4 Hospitals Approved by State Health Chief

By DAVID BIRD

Dr. Robert P. Whalen, the State Health Commissioner, yesterday approved the decision of the City's Health and Hospitals Corporation to close four municipal hospitals, a neighborhood family health-care center and major services at two other city institutions.

Dr. Whalen's action allows the city to proceed with the closings, which were voted as economy measures by the corporation's board in October and January over stormy protests from community groups.

The Commissioner announced at the same time that his department was now holding license-revocation hearings against five private hospitals in the city.

Although there has been no disposition in the revocation proceedings, the coupling of that announcement with the approval of the closing of the municipal facilities was seen as an attempt to show critics that it was not only the municipalities that will be closed down in the budget crisis.

All of the municipal hospitals to be closed are to shut down by June 30. Three of the hospiitals are in the Bronx. They are the old Lincoln and Morrisania Hospitals, whose patients are to go to the new Lincoln, scheduled to open later this month, and Fordham, which is to be replaced by the new North Central Bronx when it opens about June 1.

Sydenham Hospital in Harlem will be closed.

The Segunda Ruiz Belvis Neighborhood Family Care Center in the Bronx will be closed.

In addition, the in-patient acute service and emergency service will be ended at Manhattan's Gouverneur Hospital on the Lower East Side, and the G Building will be eliminated at Sea View Hospital and Home on Staten Island.

The private hospitals that are involved in revocation hearings now are Madison Avenue, Park West and Wadsworth in Manhattan and Kew Gardens in Queens.

All of those are relatively small, older institutions where continuing structural, medical and sanitary defects have been

Swedish King Plans to Wed Commoner, Ending Years of Speculation

ENEMY
 Carl XVI Gustaf of the Western world's reigning monarch of European royal-eligible bachelors announced his intent to marry a 32-year-old Swedish commoner, a woman named Silvia Sommerlath, in an announcement in the Swedish press exactly one week before the monarch's scheduled visit to the United States. It is expected that the wedding, the reigning Swedish monarch's first in 20 years, will take place in June, but is unconfirmed in Sweden, termed "speculation" by the Embassy in Washington that Miss Sommerlath accompany the King on his American tour.

Despite rumors, which increased in intensity as Miss Sommerlath joined the King on vacations in various parts of Europe, and began making increasingly frequent visits to Sweden, sometimes in a blonde wig, Carl Gustaf had adroitly sidestepped all questions about his romance. At a private interview in the Royal Palace at Stockholm last week, he appeared to enjoy the speculation. Although he didn't say so, one received the impression that his marital plans were one of the few areas of real privacy left to him, and that if he weren't King, is still, more than two years after his ascent to the throne, somewhat shy and slightly tentative in his approach to people. He has, however, a reserved friendliness, and a genuine interest and curiosity once he meets them. Like many sportsmen (you name it, he does it), he looks happiest in a sports jacket or sweater (his fiancée is also fond of jeans), at ease in black tie and formal wear, and slightly uncomfortable when he is in a traditional business suit.

During the interview, conducted in the east wing of the palace, the King, who is slightly above average height and has curly brown hair, was wearing a curly-curl tweed suit and black and brown tie. His sturdy hands periodically wandered up to adjust the tie, a gesture that appeared to be an unwilling compromise to merely ripping it off.

The King's life is not only an open book, but also a popular best seller here. Repeated polls have shown that most Swedes approve of the monarchy, and the King enjoys a degree of freedom and informality that is almost uniquely Scandinavian.

The enormous (608 to 719 rooms, depending on who is doing the counting) and imposing palace, which is in the heart of Stockholm, has an inner courtyard, museums and a church; all open to the public. And the white-helmeted ceremonial guards in the vast reception hall, don't appear the least disconcerted by the monarch's blue Porsche parked in one corner. Nor do they miss a step if Lucky, the King's cocker spaniel, or Ali, his Labrador, romp through.

Like to Drive
 The Porsche and an American-made motor boat are two possessions if not most prized, among those most enjoyed. The car is used to "get out to the countryside as fast as I can" and, occasionally, for racing. The racing is sufficiently mild not to have caused a flap, or traffic tickets. (In fact, the King the suspense was providing him with some fun.

His eyes, the pale blue of a northern lake, crinkled with amusement when the subject was broached.

"No," he said, when asked if the engagement would be announced on April 30, the date of his 30th birthday. And then he laughed, leaving one to think that he would make the announcement on any date except that one, perhaps to prove the seers, gossips and journalists wrong.

The man whom Americans will see next month, and who would, he says, be a farmer cannot be taken to court; he also cannot vote but he can, and does, pay income tax on personal income above his state allowance.)

The residents of Stockholm aren't too startled when they see Carl Gustaf in a store, movie or restaurant. They look, smile and wave but rarely bother him. He is usually accompanied by an aide, a duty that is rotated among officers each month, and two security guards, a comparatively recent addition.

He does, however, receive thousands of letters each year, all of which are answered from the palace. Some are referred to Government departments or organizations for further action. Others, asking for personal advice, are given an answer, admittedly guarded.

The monarch is, in fact, somewhat guarded in all his responses. A descendant of Jean-Baptiste Bernadotte, Napoleon's marshal who was elected Crown Prince of Sweden in 1810, he is a head of state and constitutional monarch with no political power. He is considered the foremost representative of his country and, aside from a few slips here and there, is careful about steering clear of political and other controversial questions.

Although he approved of women's liberation, he added that, "if possible—I can't help it—I would prefer a wife who would take care of the children."

No Normal Jobs
 He would not, he said, stop his wife engaging in a profession, if she had one "and feels for it," but he acknowledged that it might be difficult for a Queen to hold a normal job. She would, he hoped, be interested in other activities, as was his mother.

"I don't have a job in the normal sense," he said. "But I take a great interest in many things. It's a fantastic opportunity to meet people... and to be informed of what is going on."

Did he consider it anomalous that in a country as progressive as Sweden, only male descendants could inherit the throne?

No slip here. The matter was political and now being studied at the behest of parliament. Next question.

Stays With Friends

An indifferent student at his boarding school, the King has few intellectual pretensions, but is knowledgeable in international affairs, speaks several languages (his English is excellent) and is thoroughly versed in the workings of labor, industry and government. He has studied economics and spent time observing activities ranging from the United Nations to international development and banking.

Carl Gustaf, who once had an image as a mild playboy, has in recent years spent more time in the privacy of friends' homes than he has in discotheques. His most relaxed moments are spent at his summer residence on the Baltic island of Oland, and his country farm at Stenhammar.

The farm has grain crops, which he occasionally helps harvest and more recently, a small number of Highland cattle for breeding. The latter occupation did not start auspiciously.

"Two of my cattle jumped over a fence and a train killed them—that was my career," he said ruefully. But, he added, he hadn't given up. "It is not a success yet," he amended.

Also within the last few years, he has shown an interest in environmental problems, perhaps because of his own love for the country.

"We still have clean air and clean water," he said. "The Swedish people are still aware of what the country should look like... and we want to keep it that way."

The King's personal suite in the palace consists of 10 rooms, furnished with pieces taken from other parts of the palace, and it is slightly less formal than most of the rooms.

Buffet-Style Service

The flower-laden dining room is used for breakfast and lunch with his staff. There is a waitress, but service is generally buffet-style, with coffee taken near a fireplace in the sitting room. Friends often get dishes whipped up by their monarch, who is fond of experimenting with recipes collected on trips abroad, and from magazines and cook books. It is considered likely that the same quarters will be used after his marriage, but no plans have been made, and no odds are being taken on the possibility of the bride engaging in some redecoration.

Carl Gustaf, who chose as his motto, "For Sweden—In Keeping with the Times," has a clear-cut view of his role in a social democracy.

"You have to sit back and think," he said. "I want to be a monarch who would not keep back development, but one who is not before his time either. I don't want to take things away... tradition is important too. I'm not going out on the street and say 'Hello Folks.' I look at some young people who want to change things just to change, and that is wrong."

The dogs ambled into the room and he leaned down to pat them, but continued: "As society gets more complex, something standing above problems and political parties is good," he said. "I am a symbol."

The King's American visit during the Bicentennial, which will take him to 14 States, has been described as a "sell Sweden" trip. He will meet with President Ford and Mayor Beame, visit automobile and aircraft plants, universities, American historical sites and Swedish-American communities and groups.

"It will be nice to be going back," he said. "I have very nice remembrances."

Abortions in Portugal—A Complex Controversy

By MARVINE HOWE
 Special to The New York Times
 LISBON, March 12 — "There was a revolution in Portugal two years ago," Maria Antonia Palla was saying, "but the conservative, puritan mentality of most people hasn't changed—for them the only therapy for abortion is still prison."

Miss Palla, regarded as one of the country's most respected journalists, is one of the authors of a Portuguese television program, "Abortion Is Not a Crime," that has been the center of a national controversy.

Today Miss Palla appeared at a preliminary hearing before the judicial police to face charges of "offense to public morals" brought by Lisbon's main maternity hospital. The proceedings were held behind closed doors.

The Permanent Council of the Episcopal Conference has denounced the program for "shamelessness" and "irresponsible daring," medical associations have repudiated it as "an offense to minimum scientific norms," and the main conservative parties—the Social Democratic Center and the Christian Democratic party—have issued statements attacking the program as "an insult" to the conscience of the Portuguese people.

In addition, both the television station and newspapers have been inundated with letters and phone calls, most of them denouncing the presentation of such a program on national television.

One of the few defenders of the program was Correia da Fonseca, a leading television critic. She wrote in the independent weekly O Jornal that while the program had technical weaknesses, it was "very courageous" and for the first time "tore down the barricade of silence covering this collective crime."

The leftist political parties have preserved an embarrassed silence in the controversy.

"We favor legalized abortion but the program was inopportune, coming just before parliamentary elections," a Socialist militant said, agreeing with Miss Palla that the country had kept many of its traditional views, despite the upheavals of the April 25, 1974 revolution.

"We don't defend abortion," Miss Palla said. She said the program was aimed to denounce the existing situation. Although abortion is illegal, punishable by two to eight years in prison, she said Portugal is one of the easiest countries in Europe to get an abortion in, with few people punished.

Miss Palla, quoting medical sources, said about 180,000 abortions were performed each year in Portugal, more than the annual number of births. More than 2,000 women die annually as a consequence of clandestine, rudimentary abortion methods, Miss Palla added.

Comforts vs. Humiliation
 "While the high society can go to clinics in Switzerland and England and have their abortions in comfort, security and legality, the poor and middle classes have to suffer humiliation and useless risks because of social hypocrisy," Miss Palla said indignantly.

Miss Palla, who is in her late 30's and is married and has a son. She said she has had several abortions. "There are all kinds of abortions here, the third class kind, without the minimum hygienic conditions for 500 escudos (about $18.50) up to luxury treatment for 5,000 escudos ($185)," she said. Every family knows a midwife who does more business with abortions than with births, she added.

What shocked most of the television viewers was the second part of the 50-minute television show—a real abortion, demonstrated by a group of young people linked to the medical community.

"Since abortion exists, we wanted to show it can be done under decent conditions," Miss Palla explained. She emphasized that the main aim of the program was to show the urgent need for sex education in this country, particularly the use of contraceptives.

Family Planning Limited
 "Despite the revolution and all the new freedoms here, there's still no sex education in the schools and family planning is done on a very limited scale," she said. Even most prostitutes refuse to use contraceptives here because they don't understand them and feel they diminish their virtues, Miss Palla said.

In the first part of the show, a number of women interviewed gave reasons for wanting abortions: some had too many children, others had jobless husbands, some were unmarried with no economic means to support a child.

The final part of the program was a lesson in family planning. A nurse explained the use of a wide variety of contraceptives.

Miss Palla said that most of the telephone calls she has received were from women and girls who wanted more information but conceded that the reaction to the program has been largely negative.

Several right-wing parties and a doctors' association have filed suit with attorney general against Miss Palla and the co-author of the program, Suzana Ruth Vasquez, accusing them of "offense of crime" and "offense to public morals."

The lesson is that Portugal's revolution was political, but not social or cultural," Miss Palla said, pointing out the unusual unanimity of left-wing and right-wing political circles against "abortion" is out a crime.

Undaunted, Miss Palla and Miss Vasquez said that now that there was interest in the subject, they hope to get up a petition for legalized abortion.

The Cookwear Craftsman from 'Waldow, Bklyn, N.Y.'

Waldow isn't by any biggest customer, one that affords smith great respect. "I buy accept it must be a can product," ha Mr. Waldow, a of the old school, d his trade in his many, is bullish copper ("it's work with") and pride in his work. $145 each. Mr. Waldow makes only a limited number of these, mostly as gifts for friends and relatives.

In addition to the Waldow products stock includes flowers and miniature trees of glass fused on copper by Perry Marshall, a Connecticut sculptor, fireplace accessories and old Russian cookware, identified by the dove-tailed construction and onion-shaped handle bases. Prices go from $4 or $5 for small brass bells to $600 for an antique Persian dowry chest of wood with brass and copper overlay.

Are you one of those people who is perpetually misplacing your spectacles? One long-standing solution has been to put a chain on them that slips around the neck. Now there's another solution: an eyeglass case that slips around the neck. The attractive case is made of braided cording. The cord also forms the strings that go over the neck, so the case dangles at about chest length.

As to those who can never find a match, there is a braided cylinder to hold one of those lipstick-shaped lighters, which also gets swung around the neck. And you can get a cigarette case on a cord to match.

The danglers, priced at $4 and $5 come in brown, avocado and copper, and there is also a cosmetics case or mini-purse at $6, which you can sling over your shoulder or the around your waist.

Michelin's Best: Unchanged

PARIS, March 12 (AP) — The 1976 Guide Michelin, the companion for traveling and eating out in France, offers no changes from last year in its list of 17 venerated three-star restaurants.

A check of the prices indicated for these restaurants worthy of a special journey showed that a modest meal might range from 110 to 170 francs ($35 to $53). Six of the restaurants rating the three stars are in Paris. The guide lists 59 two-star restaurants — "excellent cooking, worthy of a detour" — with three additions and four deletions from last year. The restaurant Nandron in Lyons lost one of its two stars, leaving Lyons, once considered a culinary capital, without a two-star restaurant.

Along with the gastronomic splendors of the country, the guide lists 334 restaurants where a good meal can be had for 25 to 30 francs ($5.50 to $6.50) and 2,266 places posting a simple menu for under 18 francs ($4).

PARIS, March 12 (Agence France-Presse) — France's best-known literary restaurant, the Drouant, is down graded in the 1976 edition of the Guide Michelin.

The Drouant, the Paris restaurant where the Prix Goncourt jury meets annually to announce its novel-of-the-year prize, has dropped in the guide from two-star status to one-star.

Who's Sick? Not the Who

In the Eyes of Rock Fans

By JOHN ROCKWELL

The Who, the veteran British rock band that made it into Madison Square Garden Thursday night, would seem to depend on its performances on the physical and psychological health of two of its four members.

Roger Daltrey, the lead singer, seems pretty much the same every time—boarsely fervent if a little awkward, vocally, and athletically macho in his stage business (the open-vested, fringed suede outfit he's affecting this tour really is a little blatant). John Entwistle, the bass player, remains solid and theatrically omniscient.

But Pete Townshend, the second singer, first song writer, guitarist and guru, has his ups and downs, sometimes dully industrious and depressed, sometimes seemingly to have a genuinely exultant good time. And Keith Moon varies between the most exhilarating drumming to rock and complete collapse.

Center of Attraction
Thursday night, most of the drama was centered around the drummer who had been unable to continue after the second number Tuesday night in Boston, the opening show of the second part of the band's 1975-76 American tour. His illness, reported as the flu, had also necessitated the postponement of the Garden concert from Wednesday to Thursday.

Mr. Moon's condition can usually be determined by two things—how ebullient he looks on stage and how precise, and alert he sounds, how many of his patented ornamental flourishes he inserts into the basic beat.

On Thursday, he looked just awful, the face puffy and unshaven, a huge fan blasting air into his face, unsmiling, the drumming heavy and elemental. But toward the end of the half-hour of "Tommy" excerpts, about an hour into the show, he had recovered, and from then on he looked and sounded triumphantly in form.

All in all, it was a better Who performance than during the band's hastily prepared run at the Garden in June 1974, better executed with a better sound system and lighting scheme. However, it was not better than the show this observer saw in Philadelphia, three months ago, and the main reason was Mr. Townshend, who, for all his leaping and guitar excitement, didn't seem as involved in the proceedings as he can be.

Program is Similar
In terms of songs, the regular part of the program, 100 minutes' worth, was identical to Philadelphia, which meant opening with "I Can't Explain," the band's first American single, continuing with a predictable selection of newish and mostly old favorites, and reaching a high point with the "Tommy" excerpts, Eddie Cochran's "Summertime Blues," "My Generation," "Join Together" and "Wood Get Pooled Again." Then, after a 10-minute wait, came encores of Bo Diddley's "Road Runner," "Let's See Action" and "Naked Eye."

The band clearly thinks the crowd wants to hear the big hits, and that may be correct. Certainly with any band as old as the Who, sheer size of potential repertoire from the past year, and makes it harder and harder to make room for new songs.

What remains incovertible is the sheer extroverism of the playing. In concert even more than on records, the Who sticks to the rock-and-roll basics, and executes them with an angry passion that nobody has matched. Even at less than its very best, it works for this listener every time, and it clearly worked for the screaming, cheering crowd on Thursday, too.

"Fantastic, satiric, old-fashioned erotic... everything to do with lust." —Candy, N.Y. Times

"A film with taste both civilized and all-inclusive... Very much in the spirit of Boccaccio, which places it securely in the great tradition of total immersion." —Winters, N.Y. Post

Auguste Perret Honored Architecture Show Here

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

Auguste Perret died in the age of 80, after a career in which he had, paradoxically, both the French architectural establishment and a radical outsider to it.

Perret, the son of a building contractor, never received an architectural diploma, yet his drawing board came to be the most significant advanced structures of the 20th century. His radical ideas gained wide acceptance after the late 1940s, but by then it had become somewhat dry academic as if accepted by the establishment giving it its univocousness.

Perret eschewed the elaborate ornamentation we associate with Beaux-Arts architecture, but held on to what was the Beaux-Arts underlying spirit, a sense of order and clarity.

His best buildings are clear expressions of concrete structure, taking advantage of the daring structural possibilities of concrete, but always doing so within a controlled, rational system. Perret created sweeping concrete staircases, stained-glass windows with precast concrete frameworks and columns tapered toward a thin bottom, but with all of this his work was never showy, never theatrical.

The exhibition was prepared in Paris by the Society of Friends of Auguste Perret in 1974 to mark the architect's 100th birthday. Unfortunately, the French Institute has mounted the show without English translation of the French descriptive captions, which is at best irritating, at worst an arrogant insult to the New York architectural community.

One would think that somewhere in its temple of bilingualism, the French Institute would have been able to find a capable translator.

There is, however, a brochure available in English, and it contains a warm and thoughtful memoir of Perret by one of his students, the New York architect Paul Damaz, which serves as an excellent introduction to Perret's work.

The exhibition will be on view until April 17.

Ballet: Lisa Bradley

Lisa Bradley has had a special relationship with the Metropolitan Opera. Her changes of name, her patronage and other things of the arts, she is the most obvious company official stars, and she has had a rare amog virtues—loyalty.

Even those four crossovers in silence, when the protagonists unseemingly raise a titter or two, were received in absorbed stillness. Mr. Burke properly hailed Miss Bradley like the treasure she is, in soaring lifts and watchspring turns. His own strength was unassuming but unflinching in its attention to their ardent counterpoint. For the present, Miss Bradley will confine her appearances to the revival of this work, but one can hope for more.

Expert Folk Sculpture Show in Brooklyn

ON KRAMER achievement exclusively in the distant past. The "Bicycle Boy Trade Sign" alone would justify the attempt to extend the inquiry into the present century, but there is no shortage of other sculpture here to reinforce the point. "The Buckeye Family," for example, a group of four almost life-size separate figures, carved (in wood) and painted with a bold simplicity and power, is the work of a greengrocer named Joe Lee from Beaverhill, Tenn., who created the work in the mid-20's. This, too, is a work of great quality.

Among the modern folk sculptors who are both identifiable and still at work one of the most interesting is Edgar Tolson of Lee City, Ky., whose narrative sculpture on the theme of "The Fall of Man" is, if not quite the epic masterpiece Michael Hall claims it to be in the catalogue, a very engaging and original conception.

But it is, of course, among the anonymous works of earlier periods that much of the best sculpture here is to be found. At least two of these became celebrated as the result of being included in the great exhibition of folk art at the Whitney Museum two years ago—the "American Flag Gate" (circa 1872), in painted wood and metal, and the great curlew weather vane (circa 1870) made of sheet iron and painted in gold leaf. These are indeed masterpieces.

But there are other, less familiar works of great quality here, too. One of the finest is the "Newsboy Trade Sign" (1868) from Pawtucket, R.I.—a synthesis of carving and painting that can have few rivals even in the high art of its period in America—and one of the most forceful is the haunting "White Head" (circa 1900), a sculptural image of demonic fascination.

There are many discoveries to be made in this exhibition, and many pleasures to be derived from it. And not the least of these pleasures is in seeing a serious eoterprize carried through with such intelligence and taste.

The exhibition remains at the Brooklyn Museum, which, incidentally, is now closed on Mondays and Tuesdays—through May 31, and will then travel to the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

Other exhibitions this week include the following:
Millet Andrejevic (Goldow-sky, 1078 Madison Avenue at 81st Street): To see in the greensward and lakeside of today's Central Park the lineaments of the kind of allegorical existence we find depicted in the painting of Puviv de Chavannes is, to say the least, a very audacious idea, but it is one that Mr. Andrejevic gives a very persuasive pictorial reality. The figures in his series on "The Three Ages of Man" are at once recognizable contemporary types and mythical spirits, just as the landscape in Central Park that they occupy has both an earthly and an allegorical identity.

To invest this paradoxical theme with the requisite pictorial power, the artist has followed Puviv in adopting an attitude of great calm and lofty detachment. This attitude is carried into the painting, which is deliberately drained of all chromatic excitement in order to confer a certain evenness of tone. There are certain risks in an eoterprize of this sort—not the least being the risk of boredom—but Mr. Andrejevic takes them in his stride with remarkable authority.

Craig Kauffman (Elkon, 1063 Madison Avenue at 80th Street): At first glance, we seem to be staring at the backs of paintings, with their stretchers showing. But these backs are really fronts, and what we are looking at is a form of painting and construction, of canvas and wood, that has no doubt been inspired by those backs we at first mistake them for. It is an interesting idea, and it is carried out with interesting variations in the form of "gates" and "fences" attached to the central forms. The two drawings in the show are especially fine.

Power Boothe (Sachs, 29 West 57th Street): Each of Mr. Boothe's abstract paintings is a kind of "window" in which the light—usually gray and shadowy, but gently penetrated by touches of other color—is divided into a series of fixed "panes." In each of the latter, there is a slight variation in the angle at which the light comes through, and so the overall pattern is one of variations on a theme. It is all handled with sensitivity and finesse, but there are moments now when the governing idea begins to look a little too much like a formula.

Trade sign made by the owner of a bicycle shop in the Greenpoint section of Brooklyn, about 1922.

ATTENTION TEACHERS! ATTENTION LIBRARIANS!

Interesting positions in both the teaching and library fields are advertised in The New York Times Week In Review Section every Sunday!

Look them over. You may be qualified for a number of jobs offered. What's more, you might find an interesting opportunity or two to investigate in another part of the country.

More positions also are advertised in The New York Times on Wednesdays. Look for the "About Education" feature and check out the jobs... next Wednesday.

Incidentally, if you have a teaching or library job to fill, the Sunday Week in Review and the Wednesday "About Education" feature are both excellent coast-to-coast showcases for you. They reach 4,505,000 readers on Sundays and 2,664,000 on weekdays.

Reserve your space! And ask about the Sunday/Wednesday combination rate.

Top Teams Set for '2d Season' Nets Top Colonels, 124 to 106

N.I.T.'s Ticket Sale Hurt by TV Games

By SAM GOLDAPER The National Invitation Tournament, which opens today at Madison Square Garden, is on trial in its present form. Good as the 12-team field is, the nation's oldest postseason college basketball tournament will have to prove itself as a gate attraction. There is very little television income to supplement the ticket sale.

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY

UNIONDALE, L.I., March 12—The bench of the New York Nets in the persons of Tim Basset and Chuck Terry provided the needed defensive help tonight in a 124-106 victory over the Kentucky Colonels.

Little Progress Made in Talks With Owners

By JOSEPH DURSO Special to The New York Times ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 12—On the final out of the ninth inning of today's game, Tom Seaver said as he watched the baseball exiles at work, "we're putting a sign on the door saying, 'Gone fishing.'"

UTEP Increases Lead in N.C.A.A. Track

Special to The New York Times DETROIT, March 12—The University of Texas at El Paso built a commanding lead in its drive for a third straight team title as the National Collegiate Athletic Association's indoor track and field championships completed its first day at Cobo Arena.

5 1/2 inches on his second try in winning the triple jump, then retired with a slightly injured ankle after the fourth round. The collegiate indoor record-holder said, "I didn't want to risk getting seriously hurt this close to the Olympics."

290-pound Hans Almstrom, added another 4 points for his team with a second-place in the shot-put. Almstrom's put was 65-3/4, considerably short of the 67-6 1/2 winning performance of Terry Albritton of Hawaii.

monn Coghlan and Mark Belgen, won their qualifying heats in the one-mile and 1,000-yard runs. But the Wildcats lost any chance they had for the team title when their mile relay team finished fourth in its heat.

Possible Saturation Point

The afternoon program will face stern competition from television broadcasts of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament games. One hour before Kentucky and Niagara open the N.I.T. program at 1 P.M., the Rutgers-Princeton game will go on television from Providence, R. I. After that Channel 4 will show St. John's against Indiana from South Bend, Ind., starting at 2:15 and Notre Dame against Cincinnati at 4:15. Those games will compete with Providence and North Carolina A. & T. at the Garden.

Erving Tired Out

It was the fourth game in four nights for the Nets, spread over 2,500 miles, and the weariness of Julius Erving, their star, was apparent. The Doctor played 28 minutes, and scored 20 points, 10 below his average.

Roosevelt Clears Webster

By STEVE CADY Ben Webster's five-month banishment from New York harness racing ended yesterday when Roosevelt Raceway reinstated the 36-year-old driver. In a brief three-paragraph statement, the Long Island track announced "no definite evidence" to prove that Webster was guilty of any wrongdoing.

Webster slipped to second place back of Carmin Abbatiello in the final standing. He estimated yesterday that he had lost $1 million in purses because of the long ban. His loss in real income would be about $50,000, based on the 5 percent out of purse money drivers receive.

to be discussed by our still committee," said Leo Dohbin, the track's general manager. "Right now, I couldn't say when the committee will hold its next meeting."

Ben Webster

The decision was explained to the players by Seaver before the workout and was the most dramatic incident of the day, the 12th in a row since the spring training belt was shut down by the prolonged dispute, which produced these other developments:

red manner, Phil Sellers was discussing the beaten Rutgers in the N.C.A.A. basketball have to prove in the N.C.A.A. is that we've been said, "but I got a lot of confidence in my players—that's a phrase coaches use. But that's Sellers, the all-American forward, used to amaze as Rutgers awaited today's opening-round game with Princeton at Providence, R.I., in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament. It's also a phrase that defines Phil Sellers' role. How far Rutgers advances will depend on how far Phil Sellers leads his players. He knows how it. Not that Phil Sellers is a one-man team. But as a 22-year-old senior, he has as good a college team as few players do. That's St. John's last week when he got two in the first 52 seconds. Tom Young, the "hopped to his feet in concern. But the reward held up his hands in a gesture that the coach relax, that Phil Sellers was in a situation. And he was. He not only didn't even get a fourth foul to jeopardize his 1 with three consecutive baskets in the final 1 took command of the 70-67 victory that beat in 28 games.

Talk of the Town

"It's really worked out well," Phil Sellers said. "I'm in Livingston College, that has a lot of kids in on financial aid. Kids like me that I can identify with. It makes for a good social life. And the whole town of New Brunswick is all excited over. All those people looking forward to you winning, you can't disappoint them."

Hayes Posts 68-135 for Shot Lead

By JOHN S. RADOSTA Special to The New York Times MIAMI, March 12—Mark Hayes noticed today that his swing was getting a trifle fast, but he insisted it was not a sign of nervousness. Still, he added, "I'll have to swing a bit easier."

Look at it this way: if you're hiring a caterer we'll bet a nickel this is one of the most important parties of your whole life. Don't, for heaven's sake, serve ordinary scotch.

Ben Crenshaw, who had shared the lead with Green, slumped from his first-day 66 to a 71 today and a tie for third place with Bobby Mitchell, a journeyman who has won two events in his 10 years on the tour.

69 for a 36-hole total of 138. Nicklaus, who won here last year, shot 71 and Player scored 69 to join a group tied at 140.

Hayes was one of only five players in the field of 156, who broke 70. A rising wind was the main reason today's scores were higher than yesterday's. Hayes thought the psychological pressure of the wind made him try to hit father, and that was why he was swinging fast.

He had four birdies on his card and no bogeys. What the card did not show was the scrambling he had to do on Nos. 10, 15 and 18 to save par.

His salvaged par on the 543-yard 10th was one of the better efforts. After a good drive, he hooked a 3-wood into an unplayable lie in a bush left of the green. After dropping a ball two club lengths from the bush, his fourth shot landed on the green four feet from the cup and then he made the putt.

Hayes birdied the two par 5's on the front nine by hitting the greens in two and getting down in two putts. On the 181-yard ninth he hit a 5-iron eight feet from the flag and made the putt. His last birdie came on the 16th, where he hit a 9-iron three feet from the cup.

The birdie 4 on the eighth was more stylish than yesterday's, when he had to take off his shoes to play e shot from the edge of the water hazard.

Hayes has been playing competition golf since he was 10 years old and, despite four years of study at Oklahoma State, he has never thought let it happen, let the birdies fall where they may."

Nicklaus was too impulsive today. On the 437-yard 18th he thought he could carry the lake with his drive — and he didn't. Then the ball he dropped rolled into a divot, and the best he could do was punch a 5-iron about 80 yards short of the green.

From there he very nearly holed out his sand-wedge shot, missing by less than a foot. Still, it all spelled bogey.

Nicklaus had what he called a "reasonable start" with a 33 on the front nine but "I couldn't get moving" on the back nine.

Green shot four birdies but offer them with two bogeys as he found the strong wind troublesome.

Iowa State Holds Lead In Wrestling

TUCSON, Ariz., March 11 (UPI) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association wrestling championships narrowed down to a State of Iowa showdown in today's quarterfinals.

Iowa State, the first-day leader, held a slim edge with 45½ points and the defending champion, the University of Iowa, moved into second place with 43¾.

Iowa State qualified five wrestlers for the semifinals and had four men in the consolation brackets. Three Cyclones were beaten in quarterfinal matches.

Iowa put five into the semifinals and had three with consolation hopes.

Oklahoma State, the second-place team after the first day, had a disastrous afternoon, losing five of six quarterfinal matches, and fell to fourth, behind California Polytechnic at Sao Luis Obispo.

Steve Barrett of Oklahoma State, seeded No. 1 at 142 pounds, defeated by Gene Costello of Slippery Rock, 14-4.

Nastase Beats Moore In Hampton Tennis

HAMPTON, Va., March 12 (AP) — Second-seeded Ilie Nastase of Rumania posted a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Ray Moore of South Africa tonight in the quarterfinals of a $50,000 tennis tournament.

Earlier Collin Dibley's blistering serve gave him an advantage to a 6-1, 6-4 victory over John Whittlinger of Neenah, Wis. Whittlinger was helpless against Dibley's serve. The Aussie, a last-minute replacement for Frew McMillan of South Africa, chalked up his second victory.

Billy Martin of Palos Verdes, Calif., defeated Victor Pecci of Paraguay, 7-6, 5-4, 6-2. Pecci was up 5-3 in the first set and serving out for the set when he double-faulted on break point. This gave Martin a chance to come back, and he did, and went out to victory.

Dibbs Gains in Mexico

MEXICO CITY, March 12 (UPI) — Eddie Dibbs of Miami Beach beat Ken Rosewall of Australia, 6-4, 4-6, 6-2, today and move into the semi-final round of an international tennis tournament.

Guillermo Vilas of Argentina also advanced to the semifinals by beating Brian Gottfried of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., 6-3, 7-6.

Raul Ramirez of Mexico advanced by default when a severe intestinal infection kept Dick Crealy of Australia off the court. Ramirez gained the quarterfinals and will meet Tom Gorman of Seattle tomorrow.

Misa Tauber Sets Mark

MOSCOW, March 12 (UPI) — Ulrike Tauber of East Germany broke her world record today in the women's 200-meter medley at a Soviet-East German swimming warmp-up for the Olympics. Misa Tauber went the distance in 2 minutes 18.3 seconds, beating her previous record of 2:18.8 set in 1975.

Tass, the Soviet press agency, said the record was set in a 50-meter pool at the Estonian city of Tallinn.

The Saab Philosophy, No. 2 in a Series.

"WE BELIEVE HOW FAST A CAR GOES SLOW IS AS IMPORTANT AS HOW FAST A CAR GOES FAST."

When you're heading down the highway at 55 mph, you probably don't think about how fast you can stop. Until somebody stops in front of you.

We thought about it, however, when we first designed the Saab. And that's why we equipped it with big, power-assisted disc brakes on all four wheels (not just two like a lot of cars).

Of course, braking is only important if you're going, so we gave the Saab a strong, two-liter, fuel-injected, overhead cam engine to get it going.

And to make the driver and passengers feel even more secure, the Saab has front-wheel drive, rack-and-pinion steering and roll cage construction.

To really appreciate the Saab Philosophy, however, you must drive the result, the new Saab 900 GL. It will make you a believer... fast.

mander said he might go and act, and come back and join them after it." There is the split between Ireland's literary nationalists and the men of action. The former never understood the latter, until afterward. Some of Yeats's best and bitterest poems reflect this tardy understanding. But here is Lady Gregory's writing to Yeats and reflecting the full futility of the literary mind in the presence of actual blood: "My mind is filled with sorrow et... the death of Pearce and McDonough who ought to have been on our side, the side of intellectual freedom, and I keep considering whether we could not have brought them into the intellectual movement. Perhaps those Abbey lectures we spoke of might have helped."

There is the poet A.E. writing in perplexity about the visit of a scruffy and arrogant young man named James Joyce. "The first of the new race called on me a couple of days ago," he wrote. "He wanted to see whether I was he who was to come or we he to look for another, but he sat with me up to four a.m. telling me of the true inwardness of things... He is too superior for me. I belong to a lower order of thought than this spectre of fastidiousness."

If they were to sit down and think before going into their wars of aggression for instance, they could never carry them out but they don't think. Cromwell knew them when he said 'The man goes farthest who doesn't know where he is going.' To some degree it will be through Yeats's poems that the most vivid memories of Lady Gregory will remain. # 11 DIE IN 2D BLAST IN KENTUCKY MINE pounded the tragedy of the earlier blast, already the worst in the history of Letcher County here to the heart of southeastern Kentucky coal country.

Officials of the Federal Mining Enforcement and Safety Administration were baffled at what ignited the methane gas that permeated the mine.

The beginnings of the answer to that question, and the recovery of bodies of the men still in the mine, will apparently not come immediately.

Rescue teams, sent in through the main entrance to search for the 11 men inside, were repeatedly repelled by smoke and carbon monoxide generated by the blast.

The dead men were finally reached by lowering the rescuers, many of them the same men who found the bodies of those killed in the earlier blast, through a 15-foot-diameter ventilation shaft 2,700 feet from where the men were trapped.

There was little luck in the mine. The men who had entered to rebuild the mine, all volunteers, were apparently struck down without warning, killed after a period that might have lasted up to an hour.

A doctor who saw the bodies said that the lips of some of the men were blistered, an indication that they had used their breathing units for a time. The units, which provide breathable air for 45 minutes to an hour by a chemical conversion process, heat up with use. Those familiar with the unit say that miners forced to use them are often confronted with a decision between enduring the heat or discarding the units and facing almost sure death.

A Somber Scene The scene at the mine in the early morning darkness and as gray dawn broke over the mine portal on Black Mountain had the grim feel of déjà vu, a somber reprise of the scene two days before when families waited and hoped in vain.

Relatives of the men, trapped inside but not yet known to be dead, huddled at a block between the portal, some sobbing, some waiting in silence.

A mile away, down the rain-drenched and muddy road at the guarded mine entrance, others shivered and also waited. One miner, his face flickering palely in the stark blue lights atop police patrol cars, repeated, "I'm afraid, I'm afraid, I'm afraid. I know them and I'm afraid."

Elsewhere in the town, families of the men already dead prepared for their funerals over the weekend. Within the week there will be 11 more.

Relative Dies in Crash The disaster was marked by both irony and compounded tragedy. One man, the father-in-law of one of the dead miners, racing to the scene with his family in his automobile, was killed when the car crashed not far from the mine.

Among those who died was James Sturgill, 48 years old. He had volunteered to enter the mine to shore up damaged portions and help restore ventilation so investigators could enter to begin assessing the causes of the first blast.

Mr. Sturgill had told an interviewer that he had no fear of returning to the mine. "I'm no more afraid to go into the mine than I ever was," he said. "This doesn't put any fear into me."

The explosion, he said, "was a fluke, a freak."

His body now remained in the mine with the others. In the morning, outside the mine, before the bodies were discovered, his son, Harvey Sturgill, 27, a mailer at the Whitesburg newspaper, The Mountain Eagle, waited along with the others for his father to be found, dead or alive.

"After the explosion, the other night, they asked for volunteers to go back in and rebuild," the young man said. His father was one of them, he said, because he had worked in mine construction.

As he waited with the rest, the bearded young Mr. Sturgill talked calmly, although he said he felt "a lot of turmoil, a lot of sadness, a lot of anxiety."

"How do you explain?" he asked. "My dad, right now, might be dead. I accept that, but it hurts."

Asked if he believed it had been safe for his father and the others to enter the mine for the rebuilding effort, he replied, "No, I don't."

"The mine is unsafe. The company itself—well, it brings a lot of money in here, it feeds a lot of families. But it's generally known that this mine is unsafe."

The young man, who had not himself worked in the mines, voiced an accusation that others in this mining town have raised: the safety regulations are not strenuously enforced.

He said that both his father and other miners he knew contended that mine officials always seemed to know when a Federal mine official was on his way to inspect the mine.

This, he said, enabled the mine to "clean up" any unsafe conditions. Sometimes, he said, this meant diverting ventilation air from one part of the mine to another to "get a good reading" on ventilation metering equipment.

Tom Gish, the editor of The Mountain Eagle, a continuing critic of mine conditions, said that he had received three similar complaints from miners in recent days.

"They report that there has never been enough air in the mine over diversion of air, its routine," Mr. Gish said.

actly a surprise, because it was simply the latest in a long series of instances in which the court has indicated it believes that it is up to communities and/or the states (of which cities and counties legally are just wards) to work out their own community planning problems.

In 1974 the Court, in a case involving Belle Terre, L.I., said that a community's legitimate police power extended even to limiting the number of unrelated individuals who could live in one house.

And last year the Court ruled against a group of lower-income people who said the zoning practices of the Rochester suburb of Peofield prevented their moving there. A four-member minority on the Court found the decision overly restrictive. In any case it underscored the Court's reluctance to get involved in the community zoning problems.

Conversely, when the New Jersey Supreme Court held last year that Mount Laurel and some other communities had indeed engaged in "exclusionary zoning" and had a regional responsibility to accommodate a growing population, the United States Supreme Court lent support to this state-level ap- proach by declining to interfere in the case.

This legal trend has led lawyers for the building industry, and for their unusual allies in these cases, civil rights groups, to conclude that their best chance for attacking community population lids lay in state courts, where issues can be threshed out under the "general welfare" provisions of state constitutions.

"The problem here is that not one of the 50 states has yet propounded a comprehensive plan for equitable distribution of its population, present or future.

Some members of Congress foresaw this problem five years ago and began agitating for a law to encourage the states to engage in comprehensive land use planning.

courts, where issues can be threshed out under the "general welfare" provisions of state constitutions.

However, the legislation, after much travail, was scuttled last year by a chorus of protest against Federal interference in "states' rights"—some of the protesters being, ironically, some of the same real estate interests that have fretted about community population ceilings.

Hence, instead of the state-level planning the Federal courts have been hinting is in order, what obtains now is sort of anarchic competition among hundreds of communities to erect population barriers they hope will stand up in the courts.

Eventually, even with comprehensive state planning, some public administration experts foresee this intercommunity competition in exclusionary zoning, interstate competition. Oregon has already proclaimed it does not want any more residents.

If that situation arises, the Supreme Court will inescapably be confronted with a flock of mobility-of-population issues.

instantly by the blast or fire that shot down the tunnel from the direction where the original blast occurred. The men were found at 2,000 to 2,500 feet from where the bodies of the about three and a half miles from the mine entrance.

The 11 who were killed apparently took the brunt of the blast. Two others, 600 feet away and around the corner, survived the explosion, donned their canister-converted breathing units, which converts carbon dioxide to oxygen, and made their way out.

One of those who walked outside the mine today talked with one of the men who escaped, not immediately identified. He reported:

"I said that after the explosion occurred, there was a lot of dust in the air, [but] the men that were trapped, if they could have made it a thousand feet, they could get out. He was not hurt by the initial explosion; he was able to get to a telephone and get out. Another man followed him out."

Used Breathing Units Of the 11 who died, one distraught miner said, "Thank God at least that they died without suffering." He said the men apparently died from the heat and concussion.

Six of those who were killed in the earlier blast apparently did not die quickly or painlessly. Those who found them said the six had barricaded themselves with heavy canvas sheets against the poisonous gas that swirled through the mine after the explosion. Apparently, however, all succumbed to the gas.

terior Department's Energy and Minerals Office.

According to agency officials, the company had a "better than average" record of safety compliance, with one and one-tenth violations of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act since 1970 listed per visit by Federal mine inspectors. The number of safety violations per inspection for all other mines in the same Kentucky inspection district was said to average 2.

Before this week, three miners had died in separate accidents at the Scotia mine since April 1970, when the new agency took over mine safety enforcement from the Bureau of Mines. The company's nonfatal injury frequency rate was described by an agency official here as well below the average.

But the mine was known to be "gassy"—in a seam of coal that gives off about 300,000 cubic feet a day of methane, a naturally occurring gas akin to the natural gas pumped from wells.

Sinking Pound...

The fall of the value of the British pound to less than two dollars—it closed at $1.92 on Friday—is shocking to those who remember when the pound was worth almost five dollars, as it was until the outbreak of World War II. After three major devaluations—in 1931, 1949 and 1967—the pound oscillated around $2.40 until a year ago when it began its latest plunge, partly because of the recovering strength of the dollar but chiefly because of the inability of Britain to bring its inflation under control.

Checking inflation has now become the primary goal of the British Labor Government—not only to prevent a further collapse of the pound but also to arrest rising unemployment resulting from the decay of British industry and the further loss of export markets.

Prime Minister Wilson and Chancellor of the Exchequer Healey correctly perceive that inflation is wrecking the demand for British goods both at home and abroad, and will erode the profits on which higher industrial investment and productivity depend. They have sought to convince the trade unions that an austerity program in Government expenditures and a tough hold-down of wages is in the workers' own best interests—not only in the long run but in the short run as well. In fact, since the £6 per week pay limit of last summer, real earnings have been slowly rising.

Before that, even though nominal wages were climbing at an annual rate of about 20 percent, inflation galloped still faster—at a 25 percent rate—and real earnings fell. Still worse, inflation (or "slumpflation") brought in its train rising unemployment.

To check the slump, which has raised unemployment well over a million, the Labor Government is seeking export-led growth and rising domestic investment, both of which will require a slowdown in inflation. Domestic consumption would also be spurred by lowered inflation. The Wilson Government's anti-inflation program has already had considerable impact; the rate of price increase has come down from 25 percent last year to about a 15 percent rate now, still the highest rate in the Western world. However, independent economists are forecasting the British inflation will come down to a 10 percent rate by the end of this year, if the Government succeeds in holding its line on wages, spending cuts and moderate monetary growth.

Even a 10 percent rate of inflation would not be good enough to stabilize the pound, since inflation in other industrial countries seems sure to average a few points lower. But Britain would at least be within striking distance of regaining its economic health by the end of this year.

... Rising Austerity

The Wilson Government suffered a temporary setback last week on its austerity program when a bloc of 38 left-wingers in the Labor Party joined the Conservative opposition in rejecting Mr. Healey's proposal to cut public spending by billions of pounds. The Healey plan would bring the ratio of public expenditures on goods and services to gross national product down from 35 percent in 1975-76 to about 28 percent in 1979-80—a striking turnaround for a Labor Government.

However, when faced with the probability that the Labor Government would fall on a vote of confidence, the left-wingers supported the Government rather than face the possibility that the nation would turn to Mrs. Thatcher's Conservatives, if given the chance to vote in a general election.

But the troubles for the pound are far from over. The Labor Government appears willing to see sterling sink a bit lower if this is necessary to restore Britain's export competitiveness and revive investment in Britain. However, further depreciation of the pound would add inflationary pressure at home by increasing the cost of imports. It is therefore all the more important that the depreciation of the pound be offset by tough wage discipline and the austere budgetary and monetary policies to which Mr. Wilson and Mr. Healey have committed their Government. If Labor fails to hold together on this issue, a weary British public facing worsening unemployment and inflation would be more likely to turn to the right than to the left.

Lebanese Coup

Throughout the disturbances of the past ten months, Lebanon had at least been spared the traumas of a military power play against the constitutional political leadership—until now. The intervention this week by the Beirut garrison commander, General Ahdab, has all the marks of a temporary maneuver designed solely to oust a barricaded and inflexible President Suleiman Franjeh.

The danger is a spontaneous rekindling of the hostilities among various segments of Lebanon's population that had subsided during the past seven weeks of truce. Only when two critical factors become clear—the role of Syria and that of the Palestinian units in Lebanon—will it be possible to gauge the meaning of this latest upheaval, both for the nation's stability and for its future political position in the Middle East.

The Syrian Government's posture is of central importance. It was Syrian mediation, accompanied by a proxy intervention of Syrian-sponsored Palestinian forces, that brought about the January cease-fire. Since then Syrian officials have been conducting their own shuttle diplomacy between Damascus and Beirut to effect a negotiated redistribution of political power among Lebanese factions. Foreign Minister Khaddam had left Beirut only a few hours before General Ahdab declared his seizure of power.

So far, Syrian representatives have seemed more concerned about restoring governmental stability to Lebanon than furthering the partisan cause of their nominal sympathizers, the leftist Moslem factions, against the traditional Christian leadership. Even more uncertain are the attitudes of the various Palestinian leaders. Past weeks have given clear signs of unrest inside the Palestine Liberation Organization—nervousness over the extent to which the P.L.O. has become a tool of Syrian policy, and confusion over hammering out a political stance for the Palestinians in Middle East peacemaking attempts.

Syria and the P.L.O. have almost as great a stake in averting another Lebanese civil war as do the Lebanese themselves. The best outcome now for all sides would be realized if General Ahdab can be held to his stated purpose of forcing the political leadership—either a more resilient President Franjeh or a successor duly designated by the parliament—to move more rapidly toward the constitutional changes agreed upon in principle seven weeks ago.

Defaulting Democrats

A midnight roundup of legislators by state police saved another state agency from default early yesterday; but the incident does little to avert the larger fiscal crisis toward which other agencies and the state government itself are hurtling.

The roundup became necessary after Speaker Stanley Steingut inexplicably adjourned the Assembly for the weekend without adopting a bill needed to save the State Dormitory Authority from imminent collapse. Aides to the Speaker protested that they did not know the dormitory legislation was needed so soon. That is not a credible excuse.

Although Governor Carey's liaison with the Legislature has not always been what it should be, the Governor has been pressing for weeks for prompt enactment of a whole package of agency bills, already approved by the Republican-controlled Senate, and of his 1976-77 budget. At a lengthy meeting with legislative leaders as long ago as Feb. 17, Mr. Carey, Controller Levitt and others emphasized the vital importance of speedy action to restore investor confidence in New York's credit.

The behavior of the Assembly's Democratic majority since then, especially Thursday night's fiasco, engenders just the opposite effect. These defaulting lawmakers have quibbled endlessly over the agency bills, seeking privileges for their constituents which the state simply cannot afford. They have proposed changes in the Governor's budget which, if accepted, would destroy its credibility. It is as though the near—and still ominously possible—bankruptcy of New York State and City had never happened.

Quality or Politics?

Fortunately for the Republicans in control of the State Senate, the confirmation procedures of that body give them a chance to undo the folly perpetrated by the Committee on Crime and Corrections when it refused to approve the nomination of Herman Schwartz to be chairman of the State Commission on Corrections.

The nomination must now be reviewed by the Senate Finance Committee and then by the full Senate. If the second committee follows the lead of the first, a Governor for the first time in recent memory will have been denied his nominee for a major state job. There is no valid reason for such denial. Even Senator Ralph Marino, the crime committee's chairman, who cast the critical negative vote, called Mr. Schwartz a "very capable, brilliant person."

The issue now transcends Mr. Schwartz. It has become a question of whether the Republican majority in the Senate is going to follow traditional practices of rational governance by giving Mr. Carey the qualified people he says he needs to run the state, or whether it is going to play the political games of its least enlightened members.

The hearings before the Committee on Crime and Corrections clearly demonstrated that Mr. Schwartz has passed the test of leadership in his six months as acting commission chairman. It is now up to the Republican leadership, which routinely approved any and all nominations made by the Governor's Republican predecessors, to demonstrate that it can pass a similar test in government as handily as Mr. Schwartz has done.

Mr. Durst's Cleanup

A funny thing happened while the Mayor's Midtown Citizens' Committee was cleaning up prostitution in Times Square. A member of the Mayor's cleanup committee, Seymour Durst, sold the Luxor Hotel to a group that the city says is busily converting it into the area's largest and most elaborate prostitution establishment.

The Mayor and the Deputy Mayor sent a telegram politely requesting Mr. Durst's resignation from the cleanup committee. Meanwhile at the Luxor it is business as usual, between raids, with overtones of Little Red Riding Hood. "Why did you sell the Luxor to massage-parlor operators, Mr. Durst?" "The better to clean up the neighborhood, my dear." It's farce in the classic style of Minsky's burlesque.

Blood on the Coal

The death of eleven more men in a second explosion in the Kentucky coal mine where fifteen died earlier this week is a harrowing reminder that death is the companion of every miner every minute he is underground. This time three Federal safety inspectors died with the other blast victims.

The mine that turned into a funeral chamber had been cited for safety violations less than 24 hours before the first methane gas explosion; yet its overall record was better than that of many other mines in the area. The nation has a strong Federal law to insure mine safety, but its enforcement must be as stiff as its terms.

Miners have known for a century that gassy mines have a tendency to blow when there is a sudden drop in temperature, as there had been before the Kentucky blasts. The horrifying death toll makes it plain that the rules for mine closing under such circumstances are still not rigorous enough.

Full Employment: The Crucial Guarantee

To the Editor:
Recent Washington discussions on the latest revision of the Hawkins-Rumphey full-employment bill (H.R. 50) appear to show heavy concern over the "timetable" issue—whether to "promise" to reduce unemployment to 3 percent in eighteen months or three years or even four years. This is understandable because we should waste no unnecessary time in curing the miserable unemployment conditions that exist today.

But timing is less important than enacting a full-employment-guarantee law that really does guarantee. The central issue for the drafters of the new law has to be this: Once we reach full employment, reasonably defined, the provisions must assure us of maintaining it permanently thereafter.

Luckily, that assurance would be the one thing that would also help most to get us up to full employment quickly to start with. Since all of us (businessmen, workers, consumers, even government officials) respond tremendously to economic expectations, the real assurance of continuous prosperity at full employment hereafter would of itself greatly stimulate the economy in the present. In an "economic performance insurance" approach, the "insurance" is not window dressing; it is of the essence functionally.

Inflation would be provided against, too, under such a policy. This means that special measures to expand private and public activity today would be less risky than they would be without that overall context.

In particular, this sort of legislation must require that a nationwide reservoir of public-service and public-works jobs be prepared and kept permanently up to date. (In addition, of course, to those under regular appropriations, not standby.) Once that perspective has been assured, the extra public-service jobs that need to be activated now can be more readily accepted by all schools of thought. They can also be more efficiently designed and scheduled once that kind of economic machinery is seen as a permanent feature of the landscape—machinery that, however, the legislation will authorize to be used only when, as and if actually necessary.

Of News and Death

To the Editor:
In reference to your March 2 news story about Norman J. Rees, who, as posed as a double agent by The Dallas Times Herald, committed suicide, I cannot comprehend the thinking of newsmen who, when told that Mr. Rees would kill himself if the story identified him, excuse themselves by saying "the story could not be suppressed."

I'd like to ask, Why not? To what higher moral code do newsmen adhere than we mortals do? The First Amendment may give them the freedom to print the news, but why are they somehow obligated to print knowingly a story that may lead to a man's death, and, indeed, what purpose is served? The arrogance displayed is beyond belief.

Doomed History Office

To the Editor:
How sad it was to read the news (Feb. 23) of the decision of the State Education Department to abolish the State Office of History to save money. This is both a disgraceful and a wrong decision in view of the important role New York State has played in the history of the nation and also in view of Governor Carey's wrong and shameful decision to continue in his new "austerity" budget such an intolerable and indefensible item and outrage as legislative allowances ($82,500) in lieu of expenses (Julius). How can the Governor allow the State Office of History to be eliminated while permitting the lutes to stand? What a commentary on his governorship and official thinking in Albany.

The Overfunded Campaign

To the Editor:
On a very hot night last summer, I gathered with other well-wishers of George Bundy Smith to help raise the $10,000 necessary for his election as Civil Court judge. Briefly, in quiet but firm tones that sounded like he meant business, George assured us that he would work for "fairness to all."

In this day and age, "fairness to all" appealed to me, and along with many others I pledged $10 to his campaign. George Bundy Smith was elected, and last week the following letter appeared in my mail box:
"Your assistance in the successful campaign of Judge George Bundy Smith was greatly appreciated. Because all of the funds collected were not needed, enclosed is a check in the amount of $2.06, your pro rata share of the surplus."

In these days of Watergate, corruption, unethical wheeling and dealing, misuse of public, private and campaign funds, George Bundy Smith's return of a surplus in his campaign funds should not go unnoticed.

On the Future of Our Graduate Schools

To the Editor:
I hope that the editorial pages of The Times will not become an arena for petty bickering—like that in Gertrude Himmelfarb's Feb. 27 letter—over the value of private vs. public higher education.

Clearly some of the CUNY Graduate Center programs are imperiled by budget reductions mandated by city and state authority. Some of them may even be imperiled by the Regents' intention "to weed out those programs which are unnecessary or inferior." But whatever changes the future may bring, it is insane and pointless for CUNY officials to attack private universities and their spokesmen who have offered sound proposals which may be mutually beneficial to both public and private institutions.

Let's face the facts: Both public and private universities have overexpanded; both confront a dwindling pool of college-age students; both must undergo economic retrenchment. It is essential that cutbacks be rationally planned, so that the best programs in both the public and the private universities are left intact—and are adequately supported. We need to complement each other; and we must be ready to cooperate as we both approach the difficult choices ahead.

Fortunately, cooperative graduate consortia between CUNY and N.Y.U. have already been implemented in areas where duplicate programs are clearly wasteful of public and private monies.

Prof. Peter Caws of Hunter College claims that "the city is not bound to sacrifice the quality of its own public university to save any private one" (Op-Ed Feb. 27). Yet this remark begs the question of whether New Yorkers need an expensive CUNY Graduate Center fully staffed in every discipline—a question to be decided by CUNY, state and city officials. Meanwhile, it is illogical of Professor Himmelfarb to argue that "a decent undergraduate education" at CUNY "is impossible without graduate education." Does the quality of education at Swarthmore or Amherst depend on their having graduate schools? Clearly not.

As for private institutions like N.Y.U., city and state officials recognize that they are economical, efficient and indispensable to the public weal and must be supported. If, in due course, some of the CUNY Graduate Center programs must be eliminated—as wastefully duplicating a distinguished educational resource already available in the city's private universities—that will indeed be problematic for Professor Himmelfarb and her colleagues. But in the long run it may be in the best interests of both the undergraduate schools in the CUNY system and the beleaguered taxpayer.

U.S. Energy: In L Of Crash Program

To the Editor:
The Energy Independence proposed by President Ford was endorsed by Vice Rockefeller (Op-Ed Feb. 24) and President Nixon's independence launched in Nov. 1973. Project independence by an emotional reaction to an oil embargo stirred little among economists and energy We cannot afford "continuing and increasing dependence on imported oil," said Mr. Rockefeller. He estimated that to achieve energy independence it would cost us $800 to $500 billion over a period of ten years—a he implied we can afford.

Mr. Rockefeller said he fears consequences of another oil embargo. If he is having sleepless nights worrying about that prospect, he will be reassured to know that we have stipulated enough foreign oil to see through such a contingency. However, we need not take pride in defending ourselves against blackmail and economic warfare waged by a few countries by stockpiling. Another embargo would not get very far if promptly nullified with an embargo of our own on all exports destined for the countries imposing the embargo, and freezing their assets here, with like action against the countries supporting the boycott.

Viewed realistically, dependence on foreign oil should be no more cause for concern than our dependence on other vital commodities which we must import. The oil-producing countries need our goods and services as much as—if not more than—we need their oil, and they will gladly sell it all the oil they can spare, until the wells run dry—and that's a long way off. So, for the present, let us stop dreaming up multibillion-dollar crash programs for a goal that many informed people believe is unattainable. Instead, let us concentrate on achieving permanent peace in the Middle East. Let us also concentrate on getting the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to bring down the price of oil to a reasonable level. For the long run, let us search for and develop new sources of energy in cooperation with other nations since energy is a world problem and not ours alone.

If You Own a Dog...

To the Editor:
As president of the Veterinary Medical Association of New York City, I would like to comment on the township of dog owners and the in-the-hope of preventing hostilities between those who own dogs, those who don't.

It is imperative that dog owners in a responsible manner toward people in their community. For instance, New York City has a statute that dogs must be kept on their leashes when outside. This positive idea since it prevents fights, misadventures, traffic accidents, dog bites, etc. There is no possible effect on dogs. Our city also requires dog owners to curb their pets, keep our sidewalks cleaner, keep our parks and other planted areas free of dog litter and makes the city an easier place to keep clean. In addition, many dog owners are starting to "pick up" after their pets. We applaud and encourage such actions.

We ask Police and Sanitation Department personnel to enforce the leash and curb laws with at least the same vigor there is in enforcing parking laws. There is no reason why an irresponsible dog owner who is violating the law (and, more importantly, making the city a less pleasant place to live) should not be fined. Unfortunately, this may be the only way to force some people to act responsibly toward their pets and their fellow city dwellers.

We urge that dog owners act responsibly. Otherwise we may find that in the future we will have more many neighborhoods and in many types of housing in our city.

Costly Fiscal-Year Gap

To the Editor:
As a result of the new budgetary procedures being implemented by the Congress, the President's fiscal year will run from Oct. 1, 1976, to Sept. 30, 1977, rather than July 1 to June 30, the present fiscal year procedure. As a result of this change a transition period will exist (July 1 to Sept. 30).

The United Parents Associations is concerned that money has not been appropriated to most programs funded under the Education Division of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for this transition period. It is possible that this may necessitate the stretching of Education Division funding for fifteen months rather than the twelve months projected. Ewald B. Nyquist, Commissioner of Education of the State of New York, has stated that this might mean a loss of $8.4 million for just the State of New York.

We are questioning whether money for the transition period has not been appropriated by Congress because of confusion or because this is a new gimmick to save Federal funds and ask state and local governments to accept the economies while continuing to provide the services.

It is important that in the confusion of new mechanics we do not lose sight of the importance of programs.

Reforming the Federal Food-Stamp Program

By Edward I. Koch and James H. Scheuer

WASHINGTON—Liberals and conservatives agree that the food-stamp program should make it possible for every American to receive a nutritionally adequate diet and that this should be accomplished with maximum efficiency and at minimum cost to the taxpayers, with minimum opportunities for fraud.

Conservatives, however, have proposed food-stamp legislation that sacrifices these goals by discriminating against the working poor, increasing administrative costs unnecessarily and allowing large-scale fraud by food-stamp vendors to continue. Alternative bills have been introduced in the House and Senate to improve the present program without these inconsistencies.

The major charge made by those attacking the food-stamp program is that it is filled with recipient fraud. Actually such fraud occurs in a tiny fraction of cases—only 0.08 percent as reported by the Agriculture Department.

Only 4.3 percent of people in the food-stamp program are ineligible, and about half of these are a result of caseworker error. The remaining ineligible could be attributed to recipient error, but a department report observed that "errors caused by recipients are usually unintentional, arising from carelessness or lack of knowledge concerning the program."

The numerous errors in determining who is eligible for food-stamps result from the complex set of itemized deductions from gross income required by the present program. The alternative, nonconservative food-stamp reform bills would simplify the present eligibility process by setting a standard deduction of $125 to $135 per month for each household.

The major fraud in the food-stamp program is perpetrated by some of the 6,700 vendors—the vendors are banks, post offices, credit unions and check-cashing businesses—who distribute stamps to eligible recipients in return for a cash payment. According to an Agriculture Department official, over $17 million has been hoarded or embezzled by 170 vendors. This kind of crime isn't recipient fraud, it's large-scale white-collar business-executive crime.

Vendor fraud is made possible by the transfer of large sums of money under the purchase requirements that make it necessary for a recipient to pay for a portion of his food stamps. The Senate Agriculture Committee has estimated that just eliminating the purchase requirement would save $100-million in administrative costs annually.

A second consequence of the purchase requirement is the failure of the current program to provide a nutritionally adequate diet to everyone. A recent study of the New York State food-stamp program showed that 27.4 percent of the households in the program could not afford to purchase their full allotment of stamps. Many more cannot afford to participate at all.

How poor is poor?

Anyone who has to struggle to maintain a decent standard of nutrition on a limited income would see the limits proposed by some bills as unrealistic and, indeed, cruel.

Senator James Buckley's and Representative Robert Michel's bill would shrink the present eligible food-stamp population by 32 percent by using the existing $5,050 poverty line as the eligibility standard. Unwilling to wait for Congressional action, the Administration recently proposed food-stamp regulations that would do the same thing. Some alternative legislation recognizes economic realities and sets a net income limit of $8,436 for a family of four.

The Buckley-Michel legislation and the Administration's regulations actually contain substantial work disincentives by making ineligible a working four-person household if the household's take-home pay exceeds $4,679. Yet a four-person household receiving between $4,679 and $5,050 in welfare or unemployment compensation could obtain from $1,101 to $1,212 in food-stamp aid.

This situation would be reversed by alternative legislation that provides an increased monthly deduction of $30 for working families over that granted to nonworking families. In addition, that legislation encourages people to work by using their take-home pay, and not their gross income (which includes income and Social Security taxes), in computing the eligibility ceiling.

Finally, the primary cause of the growth of the food-stamp program is unemployment. Only last year, when unemployment rose almost 4 percent—from 5 percent to 9 percent—in a matter of months, the number of eligibles jumped from 15 million to 19.5 million. Until we can put our employable citizens to work, we have no moral right to penalize the victims of the recession.

The food-stamp program is a valuable and necessary program that has been much maligned for its administrative shortcomings. The Congress should strike a needed balance between helping the poor and cutting program costs, between encouraging the working poor and weeding out those clearly not in need.

Edward I. Koch, Democrat-Liberal representing New York's 18th Congressional District, and James H. Scheuer, Democrat representing New York's 11th District, are sponsoring the House's companion bill to Senator Jacob K. Javits's National Food Stamp Reform Act.

It Isn't Only Betraying Jimmy Stewart

Illustration by Jane Stewart

The other night I betrayed Jimmy Stewart. He was playing in a Late Night flick called "The Naked Spur" (1953) and even though Jimmy is part of my last 40 years as an American, as close to me as family, I ditched him for Doug McClure and Darren the Gavin in a competing film called "The Death of Me Yet" because it was made in 1971. This wasn't a simple betrayal. Before I made my decision to sink Jimmy I had a double-shot of Cossack vodka to make it easier.

But the guilt persists; I really feel crummy about it, and what's more I fell asleep during the contrived Doug McClure spy story, adding to my feelings of disgust. The point is: Why are we 50-year-olds jettisoning our own kind in order to keep up? It's not only Jimmy S. vs. Doug McClure. It's also abetting Max Lerner, Art Tatum, Mort Sahl, Dave Brubeck, Sid Caesar, Mort Sahl, even Debbie Reynolds, etc., etc., with Ralph Nader coming up, just wait and see. Are we really such bums? Can't we show a little loyalty to what we once loved?

I've tried very hard to think it out, because it's serious. I even had an imaginary dialogue with Jimmy which went something like this: "Look, James. I've seen you in practically everything you've done from the time I was 13 to when I turned 50. I've enjoyed practically everything you've done, have even loved you in my fashion. But I know you too well. I want a different kind of kick. One of these new kids, maybe Al Pacino, who's uninhibited, violent, who'll bash my forehead into excitement. Can you understand, Jimmy, why I deserted you Sunday night?"

I haven't been able to bear Jimmy's answer, just see that non-committal smile and the Adam's apple going up and down. But I'm not satisfied with what I said to Stewart. If I'm willing to junk Jimmy just for a new thrill, why won't the same pattern hold for my close friends, my real family, the values I've tried to pound out during a lifetime? Where will it stop? As a teacher and writer, I come on very high-minded; but look at the way I really behave late at night when the outside world isn't watching!

Our entertainers and writers and thinkers and crusaders are the people we've grown up with, who are over the border of 50. If we don't hang on to them, who will? Have the young—the almost unconscious desperation to be with it—really intimidated the hell out of us, conditioned us to betray our own generation like Manchurian Candidates?

The idea makes me very uneasy, uncomfortable, and I know it's not restricted to me alone. There must be thousands like me, caught in this conscience-debate that no one ever hears about. As I said to a friend recently, our judgment of public figures who have lived inside us for years is really a judgment on ourselves. It shows how uncertain we are about our own values. Surely some of our media heroes have outlived themselves and we have the right to move on. Surely some of us feel stale, and we have the right to try and freshen ourselves. But are we really so cold and flighty as we behave when no one is watching and we flip the dial, the one in our minds as well as the one on the Zenith? I'm afraid so, and it gives me the chills. Believe it, we older types are a faithless lot, less loyal, nakedly greedy, more insecure than the kids we sometimes patronize. I wouldn't particularly want to be us; I wouldn't want to be Jimmy Stewart, dependent on us for the remainder of a great career.

The more panicky we get with being out of it, the more we run toward the Zippy and Different, no matter how ephemeral it is. Has our long experience been wasted on us? Haven't we learned one damn thing? We literate over-50's by and large act like the very Mob we laughed about when we felt superior reading H. L. Mencken, no matter what the rationalization.

I don't know exactly what to do about it, truly, but maybe there should be some kind of official Hall of Fame for those who have been close to us in the last 50 years of American life and it should be ceremonialized at a set time every year.

The Older Famous should be given regular rites and rituals so we never forget how they affected us, how they are in a way. We're too old as a country now to conveniently humiliate them or place them in competition with hustlers of the New. Maybe our time of barbarism toward our special men and women is reaching an end: maybe it has to be ended just so that we can get back for our own sake to some standards of permanent respect and obligation.

I really don't like betraying Jimmy Stewart or even Jim Farley for Doug McClure or Robert Strauss, decent as the newcomers might be. It's as if we had been hyped into snubbing Charles Lindbergh at a big noisy party for some astronauts and it makes me feel ashamed.

Seymour Krim, who says he is "aging gracefully in New York—on second thought who can age gracefully in New York?"—is heading for 54.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

By C. L. Sulzberger

forces who ousted a stagnant fascist dictatorship in 1974.

Only a handful of diplomats, led by Mr. Caruacci, recognized the full weight of local factors. In an event rare in contemporary annals, the diplomats prevailed over their central governments.

These envoys correctly judged the pull of Western geographical and economic ties, the basic common sense of the masses, the influence of a fairly conservative Church, and the power of non-Communist leftist and liberal forces. By apparently being proven right, they have reassured the importance of on-the-spot ambassadors who have too often been subordinated to roving ministers.

On April 25 Portugal will hold its first free parliamentary elections in fifty years, followed in two months by selection of a chief of state, replacing the provisional President. It is not expected these procedures will be marred by violence, despite recent fervescence. Mr. Soares assured me: "The authority of the state and armed forces has been reinforced. There is no real danger now."

It is widely expected his Socialists will emerge as the top party, either able to lead a government alone or in coalition and establishing a strong executive. And most Western observers are already persuaded that, although Portugal's condition remains fragile, stability and democracy are on the road to dominance.

What will they produce? Mr. Soares says: "Now the problem is financial help. Our Finance Minister goes to Washington Monday [March 15] to discuss a loan." The country is broke. Almost 500,000 African colonists were dumped on a population of 9 million.

There is 14 percent unemployment, vast underemployment, giddy and rising inflation, a sharply decreasing G.N.P. "We need an injection to stimulate our economy," says José Medeiros Ferreira, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

But reaffirmation of Western ties is in the cards. The dormant treaty with the U.S.A. on Azores bases will be swiftly renegotiated. "Our foreign policy, after the elections, will be more firmly based on NATO and on European integration than is now the case," says Mr. Ferreira.

The army, under tough, four-star General Eanes (jumped up from lieutenant colonel) is being reorganized, from a peak of 180,000 down to a NATO contingent of 26,000 and extricated from the political arena into which it was first introduced to upset the dictatorship.

There is an enormously long row to hoe before this poor, harassed land, immersed in a sea of troubles, can achieve a modern, free and prosperous society. But anyone who would have imagined that remote possibility, even half a year ago, would have been considered mad. Indeed, several were precisely so adjudged by certain leading capitals of the West.

In some editions of yesterday's Times, the last line of James Reston's column should have read in part: [Jimmy Carter] "has not been answering the hard foreign policy issues so much as he has been evading them."

Met to Display Dresden Art Treasures in '77

By ROBERT D. McFADDEN More than 200 paintings, pieces of sculpture and other treasures from the State Art Collection in Dresden, East Germany, will be exhibited at the Metropolitan Museum of Art next year...

After expressions of interest on both sides, Mr. Hoving discussed the possibility of a show with Professor Sieber in Washington.

While arrangements for the show and the selection of paintings are nearly complete, the list of sculpture and other works to be exhibited is yet to be decided upon.

The State Art Collection in Dresden, a stunning array of old masters and objects of art gathered since the 16th century, is housed in a number of museum buildings that were leveled by Allied bombs in the closing stages of World War II.

During the bombing, the art works were hidden in mine shafts and other safe places in the countryside up to 100 miles from Dresden.

Like much of Dresden, the museum buildings were rebuilt after the war as replicas of the original structures.

Cultural exchange programs have brought three important exhibitions to this country from the Soviet Union and China in the last couple of years.

These were a show of Chinese archeological artifacts at the National Gallery in Washington in 1974; a large collection of Scythian gold from the Hermitage in Leningrad at the Metropolitan Museum of Art last year; and an exhibition of about 30 masterpieces from Leningrad at the National Gallery and M. Knoedler & Company gallery here.

Both the archeological and gold exhibitions were highly specialized, and next year's show from Dresden is to be much larger than that brought from Leningrad last year.

The Dresden collection will include three paintings by Rembrandt, including "The Rape of Ganymede," and several by Titian, among them "Portrait of a Lady in White." There will also be the celebrated series of four paintings of the City of Dresden by Bellotto.

Detail of "Lavinia as Bride" by Titian is part of Dresden collection

International

Brig. Gen. Abel Aziz al-Ahdab, a Sunni Moslem, who proclaimed himself military governor of Lebanon on Thursday, continued yesterday to demand the resignation of President Suleiman Franjib, a Christian, but Mr. Franjib refused to step down.

The Nigerian Government announced that the former defense minister and 29 others had been put to death for their part in the attempted coup last month in which the chief of state, Gen. Murtala Ramat Mubammed, was assassinated.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Government assumed direct control over the west coastal state of Gujarat in India after the defeat of the local government, headed by Chief Minister Babubhai Patel, in a vote in the state assembly.

Gov. Milton J. Shapp of Pennsylvania, whose campaign for the Democratic Presidential nomination produced only one convention delegate in the Massachusetts and Florida primaries, withdrew from the race.

National

Eleven men were killed Thursday night in the second of two explosions in a Scotia Coal Company mine near Whitesburg, Ky., within three days, bringing the number of dead to 26.

Claude C. Wild Jr., the former chief Washington lobbyist for the Gulf Oil Corporation, was indicted by a Federal grand jury on two felony counts of making illegal contributions to the 1972 and 1974 primary campaigns of Senator Daniel K. Inouye, Democrat of Hawaii, and Senator Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia.

A research group in Florida reported that syphilis bacterium had been grown in a test tube for the first time and then used to develop an experimental vaccine that might eventually make human beings immune to the disease.

Metropolitan

The Beame administration said that it would stop all aid to the City University's senior colleges in July 1977, and that the senior colleges' $140-million-a-year budget then would be the state's responsibility.

Governor Carey asked Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, to make a thorough study of the City's tax structure to determine what could be done to lower "counterproductive" taxes that were driving jobs and companies out of New York.

The State Select Committee on Crime charged that there was prima facie evidence of fraud in the leasing of the Bronx Terminal Market and that the law firm of Patrick J. Cunningham, the Democratic state chairman, had acted as agent in the transaction.

Soviet Assails U.S. And Local Officials In Office Bombing

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 12—The Soviet Mission to the United Nations, in a strong protest against the bombing of the office of Aeroflot, the Soviet airline, on Fifth Avenue Monday night, has accused American authorities of "virtuous connivance."

The protest expressed surprise "at the inability of both the local and the Federal United States authorities to take measures to restrain" hostile groups that it said were committing terrorist acts against foreign missions and their personnel here.

The text of the Soviet note, sent yesterday to the United States Mission at the United Nations, was circulated here today as an official document. The Soviet protest quoted broadcasts here as having reported that the Jewish Armed Resistance had said it was responsible for the attack on the Aeroflot agency at 45th Street and Fifth Avenue, and said that the same organization had "openly acknowledged" its responsibility for a shooting Feb. 27 at the Soviet residence in Riverdale.

The Soviet note asserted that "official U.S. authorities have so far not issued a single condemnation" of such acts. An American spokesman today denied this accusation, recalling that United States officials here and in Washington had publicly deplored the Riverdale shooting and other attacks at foreign missions.

U. S. Envoy Hears Protest MOSCOW, March 12 (AP)—For the third time in two weeks, the Soviet Foreign Ministry today summoned United States Ambassador Walter J. Stoessel Jr. to hear a formal protest over actions against Soviet establishments in New York.

Rehiring Now Key Issue In 16-Week Press Strike

By DEIRDRE CARMODY
Special to The New York Times

CHESTER, Pa.—For 16 weeks now, members of the striking Newspaper Guild here have marched in front of the entrance to the Delaware County Daily Times carrying signs reading "Seab" while inside the old brick building, editors, their wives and newly hired employees have been putting out the paper.

It has been a long, costly and controversial strike. It began last Nov. 24 after Local 10 of the Newspaper Guild of Greater Philadelphia (Chester is 12 miles southwest of Philadelphia) broke off contract negotiations with the management of the Daily Times and put up picket lines that the newspaper's three other unions refused to cross.

Since then, the principal negotiator for each side has resigned. The Daily Times has sued the guild for $1 million in punitive damages and $700,000 for loss of advertising revenue and loss of circulation (downward from its pre-strike circulation of about 50,000). And the guild has brought a $1 million libel suit against the newspaper.

Both sides have reported incidents of violence, including the explosion of a pipe bomb in an alley next to the newspaper plant that seriously injured a Chester police officer, the firebombing of the newspaper building's lobby, the alleged intimidation of advertisers and news carriers, fights between pickets and employees reporting to work, the destruction of cars by the striking members and the slitting of the violence reached a climax one evening when the publisher, who later resigned from the paper, punched the former city editor at a basketball game. While the incident was not specifically related to the strike issues, it was regarded as a rather extreme example of the tension that the strike has generated.

Much of the tension has subsided now, but there are still incidents of uneasiness. The other day, for example, Joseph R. Burt, who became the publisher last January, broke an appointment with an out-of-town reporter without explanation and asked that the reporter be escorted from the building. He later apologized, explaining that he had been busy that day.

Ironically, the principal issue that precipitated the strike was settled during the sporadic negotiations that have taken place between management and the guild since the strike began. That issue dealt with a job security clause and the procedures for job dismissals in the event the Daily Times felt it should lay off employees for economic reasons.

The issue has now been replaced by the more controversial issue of job rehiring, with the guild contending that all of its striking employees must be taken back after the strike.

Ralph Igersoll II, president of the Central State Publishing Corporation, which owns the newspaper, said in an interview that the Daily Times had hired permanent employees to replace the striking guild members and that, because of financial losses incurred in the strike, the newspaper will only be able to rehire 27 of the guild employees.

The guild represents 82 employees in editorial and commercial departments. The other three unions are the Chester Typographical Union, which has about 30 employees; Local 312 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, which represents 11 circulation directors; and the Wilmington Printing Pressmen and Assistants Union 322, which represents

DR. OTTO SCHAIRER, A TV PIONEER, DIES

Directed Research at RCA Laboratories in Princeton

By ALFRED E. CLARE
Dr. Otto S. Schairer, a retired vice president of RCA who was instrumental in the development of radio broadcasting and television, died yesterday at his home in Meadow Lakes-Village, Hightstown, N.J.

As the first vice president of RCA Laboratories at Princeton, N.J., he directed the programs at the research center that provided radar, night-vision devices and other electronic equipment for the armed forces during World War II. He retired in 1945.

Almost three decades earlier, as director of patent development for the Westinghouse Corporation, Dr. Schairer was a major participant in the planning of KDKA in Pittsburgh, one of the pioneer stations on broadcasting.

When television staged its first "planned" show in the metropolitan area on July 7, 1936, Dr. Schairer appeared on the screen in his role as vice president in charge of patents for RCA. He revealed that three receiving sets were then in operation in this area, the most distant at Harrison, N.J. Dr. Schairer estimated that more than 100 sets would be distributed at scattered outposts within a short time.

Recognized Possibilities of TV
He was among the first electronics industry executives to recognize the possibilities of television. He persuaded Westinghouse to sign a contract for the development of the inventions of Dr. Vladimir K. Zworykin, who invented the iconoscope, an all-electronic television camera, and the Kinescope, the picture tube employed in TV receivers.

In 1929, both men transferred to RCA, where Dr. Zworykin carried his development of television to fruition and Dr. Schairer became director of RCA's patent development in 1930. He was appointed vice president in charge of the RCA license department.

In the late 1930's, RCA decided to centralize its research activities. Dr. Schairer helped plan the new RCA Laboratories and helped choose Princeton as its site. Work began in August, 1941.

Also that year, he was named the first vice president of laboratories, remaining in charge until he retired.

Studied Law at Night
A native of Saline, Mich., he attended the University of Michigan and received a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1901, and a Bachelor of Science degree in electrical engineering in 1902, after which he went to work for Westinghouse as an apprentice.

A year later, he transferred to Westinghouse's patent department and began studying law at night. He was admitted to the bar in Pennsylvania in 1912. He received honorary Doctor of Engineering degrees from the University of Pittsburgh in 1912 and the University of Michigan in 1942.

He was a fellow of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers.

His wife, the former Elizabeth Blanche Swift, died in 1973.

Surviving are two sons, Dr. George S. Schairer, and a daughter, Julia Reed.

There will be a funeral Tuesday at Saline.

CHARLES ELLIS, 83, ARTIST AND ACTOR

Charles Ellis, a painter and former actor, died Thursday in Pittsfield (Mass.) General Hospital. He was 83 years old and lived with his wife, the former Norma Millay, actress and sister of Edna St. Vincent Millay, the poet, at Steepletop, an art colony in Austerlitz, N.Y.

Mr. Ellis, an abstractionist, had exhibited work in one-man shows at the Montross Gallery here and the Albany Institute of Art. He studied at Ohio State University and the Art Students League here. His art instructor was Robert Henri, and John Sloan.

After having been a scenic artist for the Provincetown Players, he turned to acting. He performed in Eugene O'Neill's "The Rope" and "The Moon of Caribbees" and portrayed Eben Cabot in "Desire Under the Elms" in 1924 at the Greenwich Village Theater.

Mr. Ellis acted in the 1932 revival of "Show Boat," Maxwell Anderson's "Valley Forge" in 1934 and "Key Largo" in 1938. In the 1940's he appeared here in "The Eye of St. Mark," "Joan of Lorraine" and "Anne of the Thousand Days."

Alexander Bellow, guitarist, composer and conductor, 63

Alexander Bellow, composer, teacher of the classical guitar and former conductor, died yesterday, apparently of a heart attack, at his home in Sherman Court. He was 63 years old.

Mr. Bellow, a member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers since 1959, was the author of "The Illustrated History of the Guitar" and books of instruction for the classical guitar.

His compositions included "Prelude Rondo," "Five Diversions" and "Suite Moliere." Mr. Bellow had taught at Sarah Lawrence College, Western Connecticut State College, the University of Connecticut and Drew University.

He was born in Moscow, taught at the Conservatory of Göttingen, Germany, and conducted symphony orchestras in Europe before coming to the United States in 1949.

Surviving are his wife, Mura; a daughter, Natasha, and two sisters.

H. Edward Vollmers, Official of Morgan Stanley, Was 77

H. Edward Vollmers, an advisory director of Morgan Stanley & Company investment bankers, died Thursday. He was 77 years old and lived here and in Newtown, Conn.

Mr. Vollmers became a partner in Morgan Stanley in 1954 and a limited partner in 1970. In 1975 he became a member of the house's advisory council.

He was born here and graduated from Columbia University. Before joining Morgan Stanley in 1945, he had been with the N. W. Best Corporation; Halsey, Stuart & Company and the American Cyanamid Company.

He was a former director of Best, the J. I. Case Company, the Hamilton Falls Power Corporation and the Hydraulic Company.

His wife, Anne, survives.

HEINRICH SCHALIT
Heinrich Schalit, a composer of Jewish liturgical music, died Feb. 3 at his home near Evergreen, Calif. He was 90 years old.

Mr. Schalit's compositions included "Sabbath Eve Liturgy" and "Hasidic Dances." Born in Vienna, he was former music director at the Synagogue of West Germany, and the Great Synagogue of Rome. He came to the United States from London in 1940.

Surviving are his wife, Hilda, and three sons, Joseph, Michael and Theodore.

TWO GUNMEN FREE 16 FROM MEXICAN JAIL

EAGLE PASS, Tex., March 12 (AP)—"I heard someone shout 'freeze' and then they opened the cells and we headed for the river," said Paul Neisepson.

"We had to slip with our clothes on because there were no privacy. So we were ready. We just ran," added Karl Kristine Jorgenson.

They were among 11 Americans freed unexpectedly from a Mexican jail about 3 A.M. yesterday by two hooded men who burst into it with guns and overpowered the guards. Five Mexican prisoners took advantage of the situation and escaped, too.

More than 500 Americans are jailed in Mexico mostly on narcotics-related charges.

Milton Waldman, Author, Dies; Wrote Elizabeth I Biographies

Milton Waldman, a writer, great men and women in British and American history. His first book, "Americana," published in 1925, was a survey of American literature beginning with the letters and diaries of the first European explorers.

A native of Cleveland, Mr. Waldman had made his home in London for more than 45 years. He had been a literary adviser for 27 years with William Collins Sons & Company, the publishing house, of which he had also been a director.

His popular biographies included three about Elizabeth I: "England's Elizabeth," published in 1933; "Elizabeth and Leicester" (1944), which stressed the long-time importance of the Earl of Leicester in the monarch's reign; and "Queen Elizabeth" (1952), part of a "Brief Lives" series of Before joining Collins, Mr. Waldman was an assistant editor of the London Mercury and literary adviser for Longmans, Green & Company. For three years he was managing director of the Rupert Hart-Davis Ltd. publishing house.

Mr. Waldman served in the United States Army in World War I. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of Letters.

Special to The New York Times
TOLEDO, Ohio, March 12—Frank H. Blood Kloeb, a former United States Representative from Ohio's Fourth District, who was on the United States District Court bench here for 37 years died yesterday at the age of 85. He retired in 1964 from active status but remained until July 1974 as a judge sitting by assignment to criminal and civil matters.

During his three terms in Congress (the 73d, 74th and 75th) Judge Kloeb was on the House Foreign Affairs Committee. In 1938 he sponsored an extension of the Neutrality Bill and helped to draft the permanent act later signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Among the cases over which Judge Kloeb presided here was the conspiracy trial of the late Richard Gosser, senior international vice president of the United Automobile Workers, who was found guilty of conspiring to defraud the Internal Revenue Service. In 1950, he was named one of five district judges to compile guidelines on trust and administrative trial procedure of the United States courts.

Grain Shipment Disputed at Hearing

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 12—The accusers confronted the accused at a Senate hearing today on the affair of the Rysy II, the giant Polish supertanker that Agriculture Department officials have charged was loaded with improperly graded, low-quality corn.

The department's chief witness at the hearing was armed with preliminary results of tests made in Poland as the ship was unloaded, purporting to substantiate the charges.

Edward W. Cook, chairman of Cook Industries Inc., which loaded the ship, was similarly armed with statistics, the results of assessments by a testing concern and inspectors for the Polish Government, purporting to show that the ship had been properly loaded with contract specifications.

"We think about 30 percent of the load is off-grade," David Mangum, deputy director of the department's grain division, said a joint hearing of two subcommittees of the Senate Agriculture Committee.

"My customers are satisfied; they have told us they are well satisfied with the cargo," Mr. Cook said, charging that departmental tests had been biased, designed to support contrary contentions that he asserted had been premature.

The two subcommittees, on foreign agricultural policy and on agricultural marketing, are holding hearings on findings of staff investigators, looking toward legislation to reform the nation's scandal-ridden grain-inspection system.

That system is also a subject of broad Federal investigation into corruption in the grain industry, which thus far has resulted in 62 indictments.

Attention was drawn to the Rysy II in January when Federal supervisors made a surprise visit after the vessel had been loaded with corn for Poland, at Cook's grain elevator, operated from New Orleans. The corn was graded by a private inspection agency as No. 3, an average S grade.

The ship is said to be the largest ever loaded in the port of New Orleans. She carried 3.2 million bushels of corn said to have been valued at more than $9 million.

The Federal supervisors, after probing the surface layer, said they had found much of the corn off-grade, deteriorated and adulterated with rocks and dust, a condition that would substantially reduce its value.

Cook was given a conditional inspection certificate, and it was decided to follow up with tests during the unloading in Poland.

Much of today's argument was highly technical, though the contentions attempted to make it simpler with photographic slides and motion pictures.

Under United States standards, No. 3 corn can legitimately contain 4 percent broken kernels and foreign matter.

Though the Agriculture Department's tests are not yet complete, Mr. Mangum presented results showing that broken kernels and foreign matter in some samples taken during the unloading had run as high as 27.8 percent.

Mr. Cook presented research studies stating that fine material and whole kernels tend to separate during loading and that such high readings are not unusual for individual samples.

In addition, both sides agreed, corn tends to break during loading so that the broken kernels can increase by two to three percentage points.

Testifying under oath, Mr. Cook said that tests by the Superintendence Company, a testing and surveillance concern commissioned by Cook, and Polcaro, the Polish inspection agency, had shown that, considering expected breakage, the corn would have been within grade before loading.

He said that the average for the entire ship had been 5.1 percent broken kernels and foreign matter.

By LEONARD BUDER A protest by parents who use this time when pupils are not present to give teachers the preparation periods they would otherwise have had to receive during the regular school day.

"This is a last-ditch effort on our part," said Rafael Abramowitz, who was among the more than a dozen parents who occupied the general office early yesterday morning at Public School 9, 84th Street and Columbus Avenue.

"We have a lot at stake here," he went on. "If the Board of Education gets away with this, it will be the first of other actions that will turn P.S. 9 into a slum school."

Late in the afternoon, Chancellor Aaker directed the local board for Community School District 3, which covers much of the West Side, to take immediate measures to end the parents' "illegal and disruptive" sit-ins.

Bodies of 2 Missing Teen-Age Sisters Found Near Farm of Convicted Rapist

By MAX H. SEIGEL

The state police, acting on a tip from District Attorney Eugene Gold of Brooklyn, have found parts of the bodies of two missing teen-age sisters in a large pond near the Sullivan County hamlet of Briscoe.

Other Witnesses Missing When the two sisters were sought as witnesses for a subsequent trial, at which Mr. LeGrand was charged with rape, they could not be found, a member of the District Attorney's staff said.

The District Attorney's office had been seeking the two sisters, Gladys Riviera Stewart, 18 years old, and Yvonne, 18, both of whom had testified last fall at a trial that resulted in the conviction of Mr. LeGrand for bribery.

Law enforcement officials said that the bodies of the two sisters had apparently been dismembered upstate and put into a washbasin. Then, they said, an inflammable liquid—either benzine or turpentine—had been poured over the bodies and set afire.

The officials said they had found the washbasin and four turpentine containers on the farm owned by Mr. LeGrand. Officials also are examining several stained garbage containers that they found on the property.

Search to Continue Police and professional divers also found bones and cartilage in a section of a five-acre pond that is two miles from the LeGrand farm, after searching for a few hours last Saturday. They are scheduled to continue their search today.

ney's office, is Kathleen LeGrand, whom the self-styled bishop married in 1968, allegedly to keep her from testifying against him at a forthcoming trial. Her two small children are also missing.

Mr. LeGrand was said to have maintained his "harem" by recruiting young women for his church, getting them pregnant, and then threatening to harm them or their children if they did not bring in money.

A spokesman at the District Attorney's office said that the women, wearing black nuns' habits, could be seen asking for alms at Grand Central Terminal, near the St. George Hotel in Brooklyn and on Manhattan's West Side.

Several of the women, who went to Perth Amboy, N.J., to solicit alms, were arrested and charged and is now serving up to eight years in prison. Both were found guilty of repeatedly raping a young woman on the night of Aug. 22, 1974, while holding her prisoner in their house.

But stricter law enforcement has caused Scar-36 and thousands of other "underground artists" to give up their trade or readjust their style.

Many of them have joined the Nation of Graffiti Artists, a graffiti workshop that was formed to help youths from depressed areas of the city develop as artists.

The group staged an exhibition of graffiti recently at the Bank Street College of Education on West 112th Street.

The scrawling of graffiti is a misdemeanor in New York. Youths under 16 who are caught often spend a week on cleanup details. Older violators have spent a week or more at the Spofford House of Detention.

Jack Pelsinger, the director of the graffiti workshop, has been working with officials at the Metropolitan Transportation Authority to have the laws changed or to hire the most prolific graffiti drawers to create attractive designs on the trains. But until an agreement between both parties has been reached, many of the underground artists say they will continue their designs and work mostly in the yards, where the trains are parked at night.

Accord With Saudis Reached by Aramco

General Pact on Cover Is Made

WILLIAM D. SMITH Arabian American Oil Co. announced yesterday a general accord had been reached on major issues involving the takeover of the Saudi Arabian oil fields.

Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani

Company, which is the world's most important oil property, did not say any details of the agreement but said it would be additional to the legal and technical to prepare for a treaty that would be concluded a final agreement.

Agreement had been held in Panama City, amid strict security, and the Saudi Government represented by Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi Minister of Petroleum and Mineral Resources.

Agreements by General Tire, T., Westinghouse Cited

By MICHAEL C. JENSEN International Telephone Telegraph Corp. and the Rubber Company of America are cited as the Westinghouse Corp. is the growing list of companies that have been questioned or investigated overseas.

The tire company said that with its subsidiary, Aerojet General it had agreed to pay $300,000 to a Moroccan consultant for help in negotiating the sale in 1971 to the Moroccan Government of an interest in an earth station for communication satellites.

General Tire also said it had paid $90,000 to an unnamed private Rumanian citizen with whom it had a contract for the sale of a 10-K statement.

MOBIL MAKES BID FOR ALL OF MARCOR

Offers Stock and Debenture Package of $798 Million for Other 46% Equity

By RICHARD PHALON The Mobil Oil Corporation offered yesterday to acquire the balance of Marcor Inc., the Chicago based holding company that owns Montgomery Ward & Company.

Mobil now owns 54 percent of Marcor, whose other major asset is the Container Corporation of America. The big oil company, the nation's third largest, picked up 4.3 percent of Marcor's common stock outstanding in 1973.

Mobil's interest, which is being studied by the Justice Department for possible antitrust violations, was built to its present level by a tender offer in 1974. Marcor common stock was trading at around $28 a share at the time.

$35 A Share Paid Mobil paid $35 a share in cash, plus one share of $70 Series A convertible preferred stock for each share of Mobil tendered.

The offer delivered to Marcor's management yesterday calls for the exchange of 19 one-hundredth shares of Mobil common and $25 principal amount of Mobil 8.5 percent 25-year debentures for each share of Marcor.

Marcor's Series A preferred, which converts into two common stock shares, would be entitled to twice the allotment of Mobil stock.

Marcor closed last night at 32 1/4, down 1/4. Mobil closed at 54 1/4, down 1/4. On the basis of those figures, the oil company's offer is worth about $35.30 a share to Marcor stockholders.

Excluding the equity Mobil already holds in the company, the proposed exchange would involve about 22,382,000 Marcor shares.

Asked why Mobil had chosen this time to make the offer, Herbert Schertz, a vice president, said "this seems the time to do it."

Mercur, in keeping with most retail stocks, was selling at considerably lower prices last year. The company closed the fiscal year that ended Jan. 31 at 32 1/4.

Scene on the floor of the Paris exchange yesterday as the value of the franc declined

Fears of European Devaluations Mount

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH Special to The New York Times

PARIS, March 12 — After sharp declines in the British pound and Italian lira, speculative pressure against the French franc has increased, stirring fears that Western Europe might be headed for competitive devaluations that could jeopardize its economic recovery.

The Bank of France has suffered huge losses of reserves. Bankers in Paris estimated that it might have estimated $1 billion in the last two days to keep the franc pinned to the West German mark and other currencies in the joint European float.

France, bankers said, was getting heavy support from West Germany in short-term credits—marks that France was borrowing and then plowing into the markets to maintain the present currency relationship. Five francs are worth about three marks.

The franc has weakened against the dollar, closing tonight at 4.56 francs to the dollar. But by selling the borrowed German marks, the French have kept the franc from plunging through its floor price of slightly more than 176 francs for 100 marks.

little under $1.93, but was higher than the postwar low (just under $1.91) set earlier this week.

The Germans were deeply involved in the struggle, because they were essentially betting that either the franc would be devalued or the mark would be devalued.

Soviet, as Expected, Buys Its First Sugar Since 1974

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

The Soviet Union has made a long-expected purchase of sugar on the world market, the first since the sugar shortage of 1974.

Commodity "news Service" reported yesterday that the Soviet Union had booked 12 vessels carrying about 15,500 tons of cargo each to transport at least 140,000 tons of sugar.

About 40,000 tons will move this month, with the rest scheduled for April.

Sugar futures, apparently reflecting the Russian interest in buying world sugar, have been moving up a little on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. The May delivery closed at 15.04 yesterday, up from 14.98 cents a pound Thursday.

In a normal crop year the Soviet Union obtains cane sugar from Cuba to supplement its own beet-sugar crop. The Soviet Union ranks as the world's largest sugar beet grower. Last year the sugar beet crop was hurt by the same drought that ruined the Soviet wheat crop and other crops.

Commodity analysts reasoned that by spring the Russians would have to buy sugar in world markets.

The world market has an abundance of sugar. Recently Brazil, the Philippines and the Dominican Republic, all major cane producers, have virtually withdrawn as sellers, hoping for higher prices.

In the fall of 1974, after a disastrous beet sugar crop, the Russians quietly began to buy sugar partly by using the futures market in London and New York. At that time there was a world shortage, though few commodity experts realized that the Soviet Union had such a small crop.

The price of sugar rose through the fall of 1974 to a record of 66 cents a pound in November under the impact of secret buying by the Russians and more open purchases by the Arab nations. This year no such shortage exists.

Anderson, Clayton Offers Cash for Stokely Shares

By ROBERT J. COLE

Anderson, Clayton & Company, the big Texas food producer, has made a bid of more than $80 million to buy all of the common stock of Stokely-Camp Inc., a leading processor of canned and frozen foods.

Stokely disclosed yesterday the move was not regarded by either party as a firm offer. Wall Street sources said it was described in the announcement as "an unsolicited preliminary proposal to acquire Stokely."

The proposal, calling for the payment of $28 a share, would involve $91.3 million alone for the 3.26 million shares of Stokely. The company also has about 764,000 preferred shares and about $63 million in long-term debt, a spokesman said.

The Stokely family and related trusts owned or controlled 12.5 percent of the company's voting power last year, according to Standard & Poor's Corporation Record.

In Houston, meanwhile, T. J. Barlow, president and chief executive officer of Anderson, Clayton, refused to go beyond the Stokely announcement.

When asked if the proposal of one big food company to acquire another had been discussed with the Justice Department's antitrust division, he said, "I don't feel it's appropriate to comment on this whole matter."

A spokesman for the Justice Department said the agency was unaware of any merger proposal but noted that "if it's just a feeler it may not trigger [the department's] pre-merger notification requirement."

The Federal Trade Commission is also understood to be unaware of the proposal. This would appear to confirm Wall Street's observation that the venture had not yet reached the point of a firm offer.

Dow Plunges 15.67 Amid Profit Taking

Weakness in 2 Steel Issues Is Factor

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN The Dow Jones industrial average dropped sharply amid profit taking yesterday after closing above 1,000 on Thursday for the first time in more than three years.

Partly reflecting weakness in its two steel-issue components, the Dow tumbled 15.67 points to 987.64, registering its second biggest decline since prices began to rise briskly three months ago.

On Thursday, the stock market's blue-chip barometer of 30 large companies finished at 1,003.31 after two weeks of repeatedly turning downward when it approached 1,000 on a closing basis.

Although some market followers were disappointed by the sudden reversal yesterday, others said that stocks were in a "consolidation" phase after racing ahead 17 percent this year.

At Thursday's close, the Dow was ahead 150 points for the year and was 425 points above its 12-year low registered barely 15 months ago in early December, 1974. Basic industry stocks such as the steels, chemicals and papers have spearheaded the market's dramatic recovery.

But yesterday U.S. Steel fell 3 1/2 to 84 and Bethlehem Steel dropped 3 to 44 1/4 to help depress the blue-chip average. Earlier this week, both issues sold at their highest prices in 15 years. Furthermore, their gains so far this year have outpaced the magnitude of the general market's rally.

The steel group reacted to a published recommendation by a Wall Street analyst that certain issues should be sold in the event of further price strength. The reduced use of steel in automobiles over the next few years as Detroit cuts the average car's weight was cited as a major factor.

National Steel, a major supplier to the automotive market, fell more than 3 points.

Superscope, a distributor of consumer audio tape recorders and magnetic recording tapes, plunged 4 1/2 points to 31 after reporting a decline in fourth-quarter profits. The stock had more than doubled in price this year.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange eased to 26.02 million shares from 27.5 million shares Thursday.

The volume of trading in all issues listed on the Big Board, including transactions on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter or "third" market, declined to 30.38 million shares.

Orange Sale Testing Quota Law

By ROBERT LINDSEY Special to The New York Times

ORANGE COVE, Calif.— Jacques Giddens, a 59-year-old farmer, is in trouble with the Federal Government. His crime: selling 3,441 more cartons of navel oranges from his 40-acre farm here than the Government said he could.

In a confrontation that illuminates the workings of a controversial, little-known and financially agricultural pricing force called "marketing orders," Mr. Giddens, a former Marine Corps captain, is being sued by the Justice Department because he shipped more oranges to market from his farm than a quota that was set for him by other orange growers.

Last month the Justice Department won a temporary restraining order barring Mr. Giddens from selling any more oranges from his grove. He also has been ordered to appear March 15 in Federal court in Fresno, Calif., in an effort by the Government to recover all of the income—almost $15,000—from the oranges sold in excess of his quota.

"I've broken the law, and I did it deliberately," Mr. Giddens said. "It was either sell my oranges or go broke. If I hadn't sold them, they'd have just been frozen and rotted and I'd have lost my farm."

companies that have gone into the citrus business—making decisions that can ruin me, so they can keep the price up," said Mr. Giddens, who bought his farm here in 1959 after retiring from the Marine Corps.

The Giddens case has focused attention on an economic mechanism that regulates the flow—and prices—of more than $7 billion worth of food each year across the country.

The mechanism, "marketing orders," allows farmer-businessmen to operate a valve to change, virtually on a daily basis, the volume of production. By restricting supply, they thus can determine the prices that consumers pay for the products.

GULF OIL TO CUT GASOLINE PRICES

A 1-Cent-a-Gallon Reduction Is Set on All Grades

The Gulf Oil Corporation announced yesterday a reduction of one cent a gallon in the price of all grades of gasoline. The price change was effective immediately. Meanwhile, four companies announced increases in lead prices. The Bunker Hill Company, a unit of the Gulf Resources and Chemical Corporation, said it raised, effective yesterday, its price of lead to 21 cents per pound from 19 cents per pound. Comico Ltd. of Vancouver raised its United States price of lead by 2 cents a pound to 21 cents. The increase was effective yesterday.

Asarco Inc. raised its base spot price of refined lead by one cent per pound to 21 cents f.o.b. delivered in carload lots, and NL Industries Inc., increased its price for lead to 21 cents from 20 cents effective immediately.

The Ethyl Corporation said yesterday that, effective April 16, it would increase domestic prices of all its standard mixes of antiknock compounds by 0.8 cents a pound. And its Visqueen film products division said it was raising prices on all grades of polyethylene film by 3 cents a pound effective April 5.

In an operation that will take several days, workmen have begun to remove the Grant sign from atop the building at 1515 Broadway, former headquarters for the large retail chain that went into bankruptcy last fall.

The Grant insignia in 20 feet electrical letters was on four sides of the building in which the W. T. Grant Company occupied 500,000 square feet on nine-and-a-half floors. The company moved from the site in January to 350 West 31st Street, where it will remain until final liquidation.

ISRAEL SEES RISE IN FASHION SALES

11.5% Apparel Exports Gain Predicted for This Year

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

Israel's fashion industry, which wound up a week's showing yesterday at the New York Hilton Hotel, expects to export $130 million in apparel this year, an increase of 11.5 percent over the level of 1975, according to an Israeli official. Hannah Shavit, director of the department of apparel and knitwear industries of the Israeli Ministry of Commerce and Industry, said in an interview here that in the last year 20 new apparel manufacturers have joined the ranks of clothing manufacturers and exporters, expanding the list to 155.

The increase in apparel manufacturing, according to Miss Shavit, is remarkable in the face of a general shortage of textile and apparel workers in Israel.

The shortage of workers has proved a bottleneck in manufacturing and exporting of garments, she said. To overcome the shortage the ministry has encouraged establishment of subcontracting plants in Arab and Druze villages throughout Israel. A total of 60 workshops have been set up in 60 villages employing about 2,400 workers.

The need to attract workers is evident from employee figures in the industry. Mrs. Shavit said. The number has shrunk from 35,100 in 1973 to 32,100 in 1975, a decline of 8.7 percent.

Lag Seen for Car Replacement Parts

By ROBERT METZ

Wall Street has made money for years on the assumption that the nation's growing fleet of passenger cars would constantly and increasingly need replacement parts.

But charts of replacement parts' sales in recent years suggest otherwise. For example, in 1973 sales of lubricating oils began to lag while shipments of replacement tires faltered. In 1974, shipments of replacement batteries dropped as well.

These trends were widely noted, but it was fashionable to blame the recession. Hard-pressed and out-of-work consumers were delaying non-essential repairs until good times returned—or so it was believed.

Investors and institutions retained large positions confidently awaiting a renewal of strong growth as motorists took their cars to the shop for long-delayed repairs. But there is at least one organization that follows this industry closely that is sending up warning signals of a new era of slower growth for some companies.

William E. Hill & Company, the management consulting division of Dun & Bradstreet, has done a study of the industry for one of its clients and scores of studies for other clients. The company's expert is Henry P. Alessio, who believes that fundamental changes are occurring in the industry and that uninterrupted growth is a thing of the past.

Mr. Alessio said in an interview, in which he elaborated on his latest report, that technical obsolescence is the key problem facing the industry today.

He noted that the decline in replacement-tire shipments in 1974 was the first in 23 years and said that shipments in 1975 would be off an estimated two million units, or about 15 percent below 1974.

It is not the "triple whammy" of the oil embargo, the auto industry slump and the general recession that is slowing sales, he believes. Other factors, including longer-wearing radial tires in combination with lower highway speeds, must be regarded as important, he said.

Meanwhile, the $1.4-billion

If you are a Serious Investor... Think what YOU could do with research like this ...on EACH of 1600 leading stocks, regularly updated the year around

Each of 1600 stocks under continuous review by The Value Line Investment Survey is the subject of a comprehensive new full-page Research Report (see example at right) every 13 weeks in regular sequence. About 125 new Reports are issued each week—1600 every 13 weeks.

This special invitation will bring you as a BONUS—Value Line's latest full-page Reports on all 1600 stocks, fully indexed and loose-leaf bound in our Investors Reference Service (sold separately for $35) ... and systematically updated by new Reports in the weeks ahead.

Now let's look at some highlights of a typical full-page Report, reproduced here (in actual size) just as it appears in The Value Line Investment Survey.

- 1. Stock Name, where traded, ticker symbol, and recent price.
2. Dividend Yield, based on estimated dividends in the next 12 months as a percentage of recent price. Plus 15-year "norm." (Statistics below show year-by-year yields, and payout ratio of dividends to net income.)
3. Current Price/Earnings Ratio, based on earnings 6 months back and estimated 6 months ahead. Plus long-term P/E "norm." (Statistics below show year-by-year P/E's.)
4. Estimated Price Range 3-5 years hence, showing potential percentage appreciation if estimates are on target.
5. Monthly Price Ranges going back 15 years, with annual highs and lows shown above. Solid line shows Value Line's assessment of "normal average value." Relative Strength (dotted line below) shows how this stock has outperformed in relation to the Value Line Composite Average.

- 6. Monthly Volume, percentage of outstanding shares traded, going back 10 years.
7. Rank for Probable Market Performance in the next 12 months, relative to the 1600 other stocks. Ranks range from 1 (Highest) down to 5 (Lowest).
8. Rank for Safety, relative to the 1600 other stocks, based on stock's price volatility around its own long-term trend. The greater the price stability, the higher the Safety Rank. Ranks range from 1 down to 5.
9. Beta, measuring stock's price sensitivity to overall market fluctuations, based on NYSE Composite Average.
10. Publication Date of the Report. A new full-page Report on this stock will be issued exactly 13 weeks later. In the interim, the stock's Price, Performance Rank, Yield, P/E and other key data are UPDATED EVERY SINGLE WEEK in Value Line's weekly Summary of Advances. You get this automatically.
11. Vital Statistics going back 10 to 15 years, plus estimates 3-5 years hence. A clear explanation of statistical terms accompanies these Reports.
12. Business Summary, giving a breakdown of the company's revenues and earnings, number of employees and stockholders, names of top executives, and address.
13. Concise Analysis and Review of the latest developments and future prospects for the company and its stock.
14. Percentile Ratings (100 down to 5) of the stock's Price Stability and Persistence of Earnings Growth, Plus Earnings Predictability. 15. Quarterly Sales, Earnings, Dividends, actual past and estimated future. 16. Key Growth Rates, showing the average annual percentage change over the past 10 years, the past 5 years, and estimated into the future. 17. Current Position, breaking down the company's Current Assets vs. Current Liabilities, with latest-three-year comparisons. 18. Company's Capital Structure, including Earnings-Coverage of interest on long-term and short-term debt, and Pension Liability. 19. Insider Activity, showing the number of buying and selling decisions by insiders in their own company's stock in each of the past 15 months. 20. Investment Company Holdings, detailing how many major funds have held how many shares of this stock in each of six recent quarters.

As a result, sales of equipment in the fourth quarter scored a 43% year-to-year increase, in contrast to a 14% rise in income from rentals and services. Business was best overseas. Instead of lagging domestic volume as had been widely expected, overall revenues from foreign sources climbed 22%, slightly exceeding domestic gross income, which rose only 6.5%. International earnings increased 20%, to account for 55% of the total, while net income from U.S. business actually declined 3.6%. The indicators are stronger for 1976. Weak at the start, new orders accelerated during the past year, showing a modest full-year increase over 1974. A capital spending boom is not essential for computer industry growth, but as general prosperity begins to stimulate such outlays, the data processing equipment business will benefit too. A welcome challenge that faces the company is how best to invest the $4.7 billion of cash and marketable securities on hand when 1975 ended. Litigation, including the government antitrust complaint filed in 1969, is a continuing concern. E.B.S./m.e.h.

Outright sales ballooned at year end. Worldwide recession and questions of obsolescence should a new computer generation be introduced had impeded customers to favor rental rather than outright purchase of machines as 1974 ended and 1975 began. As the year progressed, however, user confidence began to return, and the nature of IBM product introductions served to emphasize the durability of existing computer designs. IBM came through with records in 1975, as usual. But not everything was up for the computer industry leader last year. Total shipments and employment, for example, were lower than the year before. At the bottom line, however, where it counts most, earnings reached a new high of $13.35 a share—up 7% from $12.50 in 1974, to $14.4 billion. The strong finish for 1975 in a recovering economy helps to reassure holders that the lull earlier in the year was only temporary and that expansion has resumed in line with the long-term trend. Still trading at less than its normal earnings multiple, the stock will probably outperform the market averages this coming year.

Reasonable' Regulation
Essayed by Richardson

By ROBERT M. SMITH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 12 (UPI)—The latest Government effort to regulate business—Richardson called to regulatory reason—first formal news of the new Secretary's means. He indicated, however, that what he is educating the public on is the costs of variations imposed on a society, which undeniably on enterprise and responsibility, is essential balance. To do so, he said, the department will take the public by "responsible and positions on major issues."

Richardson said that if there is any deal with the Soviet Union, it will not provide terms significantly less than the world oil price. He added, however, that there might be some benefits for United States shipping. Mr. Richardson also announced today that he had asked the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis to determine whether "qualitative" variables could be introduced into the national accounting system. "The issue, he explained, is whether we can look as part of our national balance sheet, at the deterioration of our environment—like the recognition of depreciation as a cost."

While he characterized the problem as trying "to qualify the unquantifiable," Mr. Richardson said that, without such a calculation it would be impossible to undertake the weighing of costs and benefits that he thinks is necessary to improve public understanding of the nature of the choices.

Stokely stock remained unchanged yesterday at 20 1/2. Stokely stock remained unchanged yesterday at 20 1/2. In its announcement, Stokely said the proposal would be "carefully evaluated" at a board meeting to be called in the next future. Stokely stressed, however, that Anderson, Clayco, in making the proposal, would pursue the proposal "only with the support of the board of directors of Stokely."

Anderson, Clayco, whose brand names include Chiffon margarine and Seven Seas salad dressing, reported sales for fiscal 1975 of $479 million, while Stokely sales for the year were reported at nearly $455 million.

The proposal, Stokely said, called for $28 in cash for each share of common or an exchange of a new convertible preferred stock valued at about $28, or a combination of both. Bethlehem Copper Drops Valley Camp Tender Offer

The Bethlehem Copper Corporation, 22 percent owned by the Westmont Mining Corporation, reported yesterday in Vancouver, B. C., that it had tentatively dropped plans for a $55 tender offer for all of the stock in the Valley Camp Coal Company of Cleveland. The offer would have been worth about $48 million.

Engelhard Minerals Expands Into Australia

Embarking on what appears to be a significant expansion into iron-ore operations in Australia, the Engelhard Minerals and Chemicals Corporation reported here yesterday that it was joining with Burns, Philp & Company of Australia in buying a 43 percent interest in Robe River, a publicly owned Australian company.

It made the offer to the Bond Corporation, it said, with an 49 percent interest and Burns, Philp the rest. Robe River has a 35 percent interest in an iron ore project in western Australia, Engelhard added.

Pennsylvania Power and Light Acquires Interstate Energy

The Pennsylvania Power and Light Company reported yesterday that a subsidiary known as the Realty Company of Pennsylvania had acquired all of the stock of the Interstate Energy Company, owner of an 84-mile oil pipeline from Marcus Hook, Pa., to Martins Creek, Pa.

Pennsylvania Power said the system, due to open in May at a cost of about $10 million to Interstate would be operated by Gulf Interstate Energy Inc., owner of the Interstate stock.

Directors of the Sprague Electric Company said they voted unanimously yesterday to approve an agreement in principle to merge the company into the Cabot Corporation of Boston. Based on yesterday's closing price for Cabot stock the deal would involve about $49 million.

IN PROFIT TAKING

Shares of Dow Chemical Co. fell 15.67 points to 117.74. Losses on the order of 3 or more points appeared in Eastman Kodak, Getty Oil and I.B.M.

Abbott Laboratories, however, rose a point to 41 1/2 after raising its dividend and delaying the sale of 2 million shares of common stock.

A substantial increase in the number of equity offerings often has the effect of blunting the market's general advance because investor money is diverted into newly issued shares. In essence, a greater supply of shares is created, while the demand, or investment, side of the equation remains the same.

It was two weeks ago that the stock market began to react nervously to signs that the Federal Reserve Board had tightened its monetary policy by a notch.

However, the credit markets improved in tone and price this week and the feeling of some "Fed watchers" is that this taken rise in interest rates appears to have run its course for the time being.

Furthermore, the Fed is expected to follow a stable monetary policy during the next few weeks that will mark a period of heavy Treasury financing.

The stock market, despite the Dow's close above 1,000 on Thursday, has actually been tracing a consolidation—or sideways—pattern since late February.

Some analysts believe that the publication of glowing corporate reports for the first quarter of 1976, which will begin to appear in April, could provide impetus for another "upleg" in this stage of the bull market.

Meanwhile, Wall Street analysts said that part of the trading volume of the last several weeks, as the Dow flirted with the 1,000 mark, stemmed from activity by professional traders or substantial individual investors, who are able to buy and sell stocks at commission rates substantially lower than those available to the small investor.

People and Business

Kleppe Scores U.S. Coal Policy

Thomas S. Kleppe

Interior Secretary Thomas S. Kleppe warned yesterday that in the face of restrictive legislative moves, the nation's coal producers are "left in a state of uncertainty" by Administration pleas to increase production.

In a speech at the annual Coal Conference on Professional Lease Management in New Orleans, Mr. Kleppe noted that while the executive branch is calling on industry to increase production, the legislative branch says in effect "production must be increased, but you must be very restrictive in how and where you mine."

Mr. Kleppe said that to proceed along both paths can do more than curtail initiative in the industry—"it can kill it."

He said the "most critical issue facing the nation" involves the search for an answer to the increasing differences between energy demand and energy production. Mr. Kleppe stressed that to achieve energy independence, the country must make a decision of enormous political and moral will.

"It is far easier to reclaim the environment," he said, "than it would be to reclaim our independence from foreign oil sources a decade from now."

Assistant Treasury Secretary Gerald L. Pinsky said at a news conference in Washington yesterday that he did not think any oil producing country will seek a larger price increase than 10 percent this year.

He said that he expects the world's largest oil exporter, Saudi Arabia, to advocate a freeze at a price meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Indonesia in May.

The Government official said that other members of OPEC including Iran, probably would push for higher prices. Mr. Pinsky said he felt that Saudi Arabia probably would agree to some increase if that is necessary to keep OPEC from falling apart.

He added that he did not think any price increase "is economically justifiable" and that a further price increase would impede the international economic recovery and reduce the world demand for oil.

Joe Black, a vice president of the Greyhound Corporation, yesterday accused the Ford Administration of failing to crack down on powerful corporations for violations of minority hiring laws.

"If they would make a couple of arrests, all this would stop," said Mr. Black, a former relief pitcher for the old Brooklyn Dodgers.

At a news conference in Tallahassee, Fla., Mr. Black charged that the Administration has kept the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission from acting against corporations it found violating hiring laws.

"Too often, the commissioners of the E.E.O.C. have gone and found companies in violation, but they are large companies and have influence and make contributions to Presidential campaigns," he said. He did not identify the companies he had in mind.

Mr. Black said that large corporations were eager to comply with minority hiring laws when E.E.O.C. was forcing compliance in the 1960's but "now they have their so-called quota and are no longer interested in hiring qualified blacks."

The former Brooklyn Dodger, who retired from baseball in 1957, is Greyhound's vice president for special matters.

Senator William Proxmire disclosed yesterday in Washington that he would introduce a bill making it a Federal crime for United States corporations to bribe foreign officials.

The Wisconsin Democrat said in a prepared statement that he would propose the bill because of recent disclosures of foreign payments by a number of large American corporations, including the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation and the Exxon Corporation.

Senator Proxmire, who is chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, cautioned that if such practices are not stopped, "they will corrupt the domestic economic system, too."

He said the new bill, which would require United States companies periodically to disclose all foreign sales agents and their fees, would be enforced by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

JOE BLACK: Alfred W. Pelletier, president of Mack Trucks Inc., was elected chief executive officer of the company. Mr. Pelletier, 54, has been president since Jan. 1, when he succeeded Henry J. Nave, 62, who had served as chairman, president and chief executive officer since 1974.

Mr. Nave remains as chairman. Mr. Pelletier formerly was president of Mack Trucks Canada, Ltd., a subsidiary of Mack Trucks Inc.

round voting this Sunday for cantonal officials. A devaluation might hurt candidates aligned with President Giscard d'Estaing's majority.

Speculators contend that the present mark-franc relationship cannot hold because France's inflation has been running twice as high as West Germany's.

Furthermore, French firms have been affected by the devaluations of the pound, the lira and earlier the Spanish peseta. Britain, Italy and Spain, whose products are now made less costly, buy about a third of French exports and compete with France in foreign markets.

The slide in the value of the pound—by 5 percent within the last week alone—triggered the onslaught against the franc. Bankers in Europe were of sharply differing opinions about what might happen.

There were rumors that the French might close their currency market next Monday, the day that Finance Ministers of the Common Market are scheduled to meet in Brussels.

One top banker in London said he thought no change would take place immediately because of West German support for the franc and because French reserves were still large.

The latest report of the Bank of France showed $8 billion of currency reserves, mainly dollars, and 3,140 tons of gold. The French value their gold reserves at market-related prices, makes the gold worth some $14 billion.

Echoing the same opinion another London banker said that a major test had now come for the Rambouillet Agreement of last November when the United States, France, West Germany, Japan and Italy agreed that they would coordinate monetary activity more closely to prevent erratic currency fluctuations in the market place.

A banker in Paris said he felt the franc would probably not be able to withstand the attack because of its size and the reluctance of authorities to lose reserves or go into debt.

Dollar Consolidates Gains BRUSSELS, March 12 (UPI)—The dollar consolidated its gains of the last four days when European money markets closed today. Gold lost ground, dropping in Zurich from $133.87 an ounce to $133.37 and in London from $133.75 to $133.50.

MOBIL MAKES BID FOR ALL OF MARCOR

with a substantial gain in earnings. David Taylor, an E.H. Hutton & Company securities analyst who specializes in retail stocks, said he thought Mobil had made its move over because of the possibility that Marcor might be trading at even higher prices later. "We expect their earnings gains to continue," the analyst added.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Justice Department said the antitrust division was investigating Mobil's initial investment in Marcor.

Mr. Schmetz said Mobil had informed the Justice Department of the new proposal with a "courtesy call" yesterday, and added that "we have not heard from the antitrust division in many months."

Controversy Aroused The Mobil tender offer in 1974 touched off a controversy on two different levels in Washington. Some legislators charged that Mobil was diverting capital out of its primary business that should have been employed in more exploration for oil and gas.

Other critics focused on the size of what even then was regarded as a possible consolidation. Marcor's Montgomery Ward is the nation's fourth largest general merchandise retailer and its container division is the largest domestic producer of paperboard packaging.

3 COMPANIES CITE PAYMENTS ABROAD Continued From Page 31 an office in Bucharest for help between 1971 and 1973 in getting a Rumanian Government contract to build a radial tire plant. According to an article in the current issue of New York magazine, Tire paid $150,000 to a company headed by Saudi Arabian businessman Adnan Khashoggi, to get it off the Arab blacklist of companies doing business with Israel. The article said General Tire had been unsuccessful in getting off the blacklist, even though it had disposed of its shares it held in an Israel firm company in 1963. In 1970, the magazine said, a representative of the Triad Financial Establishment, the company headed by Mr. Khashoggi, offered to pay $150,000. In 1973, General Tire was removed from the blacklist. The article quoted General Tire officials as having said they had done nothing improper and had paid the fee for professional services.

NEW YORK, March 12 (UPI)—New York bindery are using apparatus to bind books by welding the edges together without using thread, adhesives or wire. A major publisher has ordered a book made by the process. Berdor and Mortimer were granted Patent 3,943,295 this week for a new method of binding books. The mechanism, which is to be connected to a conventional internal combustion engine, removes excess liquid gasoline from the fuel-air stream passing between the carburetor and the intake manifold, and returns the excess to the car's main tank. Experimental models have been tested on a highway.

Besides increasing gasoline mileage by 15 or 20 percent, the system is regarded as promising a considerable reduction in air pollution.

Cutting Bathroom Slips Paul Kolsman, a New York engineer who holds more than 100 patents on aviation instruments and other technical equipment, has invented slip-resistant surfaces to keep people from falling in bathtubs and showers.

Mr. Kolsman, who was granted Patent 3,943,199 this week, found that slip resistance of a bathing surface depends on how rapidly it that collects.

NEW AGENCY SET UP FOR FOREIGN TRADE

WASHINGTON, March 12 (UPI)—Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson announced today the formation of a new inter-agency Government committee to deal with the interests of the broad "services" sector of the United States economy in the current international trade negotiations.

In answer to questions at a news conference, Mr. Richardson said the committee will have particular reference to computer technology and the software associated with it. It is not yet clear how the trade negotiations in Geneva will deal with this matter. Mr. Richardson said that more than half of the United States gross national product is "now accounted for by services and industry."

Sale of Oranges Testing 'Marketing Orders' Law

permarket prices has come under increasing scrutiny and criticism from the Federal Trade Commission, some consumer groups and some members of Congress. Marketing orders originated in the 1930's, when Congress enacted legislation that allowed farmers' cooperatives and associations to regulate the quality and flow of commodities shipped to market and to restrict the percentage of crops that could be sold fresh, processed, or exported.

The principal argument for the early laws was that they were needed to put some order into the volatile ups and downs of agricultural prices resulting from vagaries of the weather.

There are now 49 Federal marketing orders in effect in more than 25 states for fruits, nuts and vegetables. There are also 60 marketing orders in effect for dairy products, also the target of growing criticism over alleged abuses.

In California, besides navel oranges, the production of more than a dozen other nondairy products—such as grapes, almonds, walnuts, pears, lemons, papayas, raisins, runes and figs—are "regulated," a term applied by the Agriculture Department.

Group Convenes Once a week an 11-member organization called the Navel Orange Administration Committee meets in Los Angeles to decide how many carloads of oranges, of varying sizes, can be shipped in the immediate future. The decision is based upon the amount of inventories already shipped, in transit and in the marketplace, recent sales patterns, weather conditions, expected imports from Mexico and other factors.

After the committee has made its decision, it advises the Agriculture Department in Washington by teletype, and the department then publishes these figures in the Federal Register. The recommendations thus become law. In only very rare instances has the department raised the quota beyond the recommendations of the crop committees, according to department officials. Once the periodic allocations are determined, the committee in Los Angeles apportions this total among approximately 150 packing houses—known as "handlers"—in California and Arizona. Then each handler prorates its share of the total among the growers it serves—a single large grower in some cases or up to 200 or so smaller ones.

The law reaches far into the marketing chain. Technically, an Agriculture Department attorney said, even a homeowner who has a few orange trees in his backyard is subject to regulation if he wants to sell his oranges. Roadside stands, if they want to sell fruit, must obtain special exemptions from the committee for each commodity sold if it is produced by farmers outside the allocation system.

Opinions Voiced Agricultural leaders connected with the system defend it as equitable both to producers and consumers. They say that it "averages out" prices consumers pay during a lousy season, avoiding a glut that can depress prices but limiting shortages that can cause higher prices and giving farmers stability that results in increased production.

"Without the marketing orders, there'd be chaos," asserted Billy Peigthel, manager of the Navel Orange Administration Committee. He said it takes at least four years for new orange trees to begin producing, making it impossible for farmers to anticipate marketing conditions in time to fine-tune the supply without such regulations. Nevertheless, criticism of the present system is growing. A recent Federal Trade Commission staff study concluded that marketing orders inflate food prices for consumers, create inefficiencies, and help large cooperatives to dominate the production of many important agricultural commodities.

EX-GULF LOBBYIST INDICTED ON GIFTS

turned up on such contributions. A spokesman for Senator Inouye, who is in Hawaii for the weekend, said the Senator had no record of receiving a contribution from Mr. Wild or Gulf.

Mr. Wild, who was not in the courtroom when the indictment was returned, pleaded guilty two years ago to a misdemeanor charge of making an illegal contribution to the 1972 re-election campaign of President Richard M. Nixon. He was fined $1,000.

The new charges carry a maximum penalty of two years in prison and a fine of $10,000 on each count. The indictment was the first returned by the Special Watergate Prosecutor's office in about eight months.

Several corporate executives were indicted on felony and misdemeanor counts for illegal campaign contributions in the aftermath of the Watergate investigation.

Gulf, the nation's seventh largest industrial corporation, spent $12.3 million in this country and abroad for political contributions and under-the-table payments to foreign officials.

The new charges against Mr. Wild are that he "did willfully and unlawfully consent to the making of a contribution by Gulf Oil Corporation in connection with the 1972 and 1974 primary and general elections."

The indictment said Mr. Wild approved contributions of about $5,000 for Senator Inouye's campaign between March and June 1973 and of $2,500 on Sept. 27, 1972, to the Nunn campaign.

Mr. Wild, who is 52 years old, was vice president of government relations for Gulf at that time.

Gulf Cites Steps Taken PITTSBURGH, March 12 (UPI)—The Gulf Oil Corporation said today that it had taken every conceivable step to insure that its funds would never again be used for unlawful purposes.

Gulf admitted making contributions to a number of foreign and domestic politicians, including the Senate Republican leader, Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania. The contributions prompted an investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission and by a Senate committee. Gulf said in its annual report for 1975 that a code of ethics had been established for company personnel and that auditing procedures had been strengthened. "As a result, we believe that the company has taken every reasonable action it can to insure that corporate funds are never again used for unlawful purposes," Gulf said. "It has been a tragic chapter in the proud history of our company."

FOREMOST REPORTS AN INQUIRY BY S.E.C.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 12 (UPI)—Foremost-McKesson Inc. disclosed today that it was under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission over possible violations of Federal securities laws involving disclosure of information. The company is a wholesale distributor of drugs, liquors and other products.

In the company's third-quarter report to stockholders, president William W. Morison said it was the policy of Foremost-McKesson "to operate its business in conformity with all applicable laws."

The S.E.C. be said, "is currently conducting an investigation to determine whether elements of the company may have violated this policy by engaging in practices which might require disclosure under the Federal securities laws."

Carey Reported Yielding on Local Aid

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 12—Governor Carey has acceded to the Legislature's insistence that he rescind many of his proposed sharing and other local-assistance programs, legislative officials indicated today.

Following a meeting in New York City of the Emergency Finance Control Board, Mr. Carey indicated that this shift himself when he said New York City's budget next year "will reflect the fact that local aid will be relatively intact." He declined, however, to discuss any details.

"The Governor has basically come around to our point of view," one legislative aide said here today as he rushed from one set of negotiations to another on the complicated budget problems. "In general, we have achieved a lot of progress in the last day or two."

There continued to be substantial disagreement, however, on the size of the restorations, although legislative aides expected them to be between $180 million and $200 million.

A Drive for Accord

The Governor's move was taken by fiscal experts as an important development in the drive to reach an accord with the Legislature by Monday on the outlines, at least, of a balanced budget. At the same time, it was far from unexpected.

Lawmakers have been saying for weeks that it was only a matter of time before Mr. Carey recognized the political reality that legislative leaders were unwilling, and in fact unable, to produce the votes in an election year for a budget containing the sizable reductions to local assistance that the Governor had wanted.

The shift by Mr. Carey, however, actually complicates the budget negotiations. This is because the Governor and his aides must now choose in painstaking fashion among other budget items, particularly the state's own programs, to cut back as alternatives to the restored local-assistance funds.

The negotiations are aimed at achieving agreement on the budget this year two weeks earlier than usual. The deadline of next Monday was selected because that is the day that the tailoring state construction agencies have $370 million in notes coming due.

The investment partners in the scheduled rescue of the agencies are demanding that there be some agreement on the budget as a condition to their participation in the bail out Monday and beyond.

The most insistent of the partners on this particular matter are the banks and State Comptroller Arthur Levitt, acting in his capacity as so investor of the state employee pension funds for which he is trustee.

Agreement Demanded

Republicans and Democrats are reportedly seeking the following restorations of cutbacks in local-assistance programs: $116 million for education aid at least $50 million, and perhaps $85 million, in revenue sharing; $14 million in sewage treatment programs, which was an urgent demand by New York City; and $8 million in assistance for rural highway programs, primarily benefiting upstate communities.

Democrats were pushing for restorations, also, of $25 million in home-relief payments and optional Medicaid service eliminated in the Governor's program of welfare and social services cuts. But Republicans were said to be unresponsive to this.

As alternatives, the Legislature was reportedly pushing suggestions of cutting administrative costs in all state agencies—particularly Mental Hygiene, Education, and Correctional Services—worth $120 million. It was also said to be seeking extensive cuts in other types of local-assistance programs, such as grants to the State Council on the Arts and drug-addiction programs, as well as cuts in legislative and judicial expenses.

Governor Carey's office was said to be resisting cutbacks to be implemented by downward estimates of certain expense items. For instance, the Legislature was suggesting that the State University could save money next year on fuel and that the Governor's estimated cost for debt service could be trimmed by $20 million.

These ideas were being viewed skeptically by the state's Budget Director, Peter C. Goldmark Jr., who has continuously expressed the fear that potential investors to state securities would question whether budget cuts on paper can achieve cash savings in reality. The same sort of attitude was causing Mr. Goldmark and his staff to resist still another suggestion by Democrats in the Legislature that the Governor could restore some of his budget cutbacks by revising his tax-revenue projections upward.

The Governor ruled out an initial suggestion that an upward revision of $100 million or more was warranted by an economic upturn in the state. Democrats said they were hoping he might agree to a smaller revision, perhaps under $50 million.

Negotiations on cuts in the "state purposes" side of the budget were being conducted in utmost secrecy. Legislative leaders were trying to arrive at a package of reductions before word of particulars spread to the agencies or interest groups being cut.

Flurry of Protests

Staff members have expressed dismay every time something concrete about budget cuts has appeared in the newspapers, since a published report never fails to prompt a flurry of protests.

Such was the case last week when word got out that there would be extensive cuts in funds for the Council on the Arts. And when it was heard that narcotics programs would be cut by as much as $45 million, lobbyists from drug-treatment organizations appeared in the Capitol to buttonhole legislators and staff members to stop them. On the ground that this represented a 50 percent cutback.

A key legislative aide said he was sure the proposed drug-cutback would be softened somewhat before the talks were through. But a legislator said there would be some heavy cutbacks in drug programs for reasons that illustrated a classic twist in budgetary politics.

Politicians have become disenchanted with drug centers, he said, since the period five years ago when everybody was conscious of the problem.

Now, he said, many of the programs have become "little political machines" in their neighborhoods, dispensing jobs and threatening the bases of the legislators themselves, much the way antipoverty programs did in the 1960's.

"When you have a tight budget," he said, "you can see why there's less tolerance of that sort of thing than there was in the past."

BERGMAN LICENSE FACES REVOCATION

Operator of Nursing Homes Still Runs One Uptown

The State Health Department said yesterday that it would move to revoke the nursing-home license of Bernard Bergman, who on Thursday pleaded guilty to Medicaid fraud and the bribery of Albert H. Blumenthal, the Assembly majority leader.

The step would apply to the only remaining facility of which Mr. Bergman is the registered operator, the 520-bed Park Crescent Nursing Home, at 87th Street and Riverside Drive. A longstanding proceeding to revoke its license because of an unauthorized partnership transaction had been deferred by the department during the criminal investigation.

Meanwhile, rumors were rife in political circles here that other prominent figures would be incriminated by Mr. Bergman. Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein, campaigning for the Democratic Senatorial nomination, quipped in a speech: "They'll have to hold the next session of the Legislature in the Tombs."

Carey Comments

At a news conference in Albany, Governor Carey was asked to comment on the indictment of Mr. Blumenthal on a bribery charge.

"The criminal-justice system is working and we indulge the presumption of innocence," he said.

Asked whether the majority leader should step down, he replied: "That's not a requirement that I know of in the law." Pressed for a recommendation, he added: "I'm not in a position to offer any advice except to defend himself and purge himself of the indictment."

The first step toward revocation of the Bergman license will be taken at a meeting of the Public Health Council next Friday. A hearing must follow and if Mr. Bergman uses all legal recourse, the proceeding may take years. Walter Livey, chief enforcement officer of the department, said he hoped that the Legislature would approve a faster procedure for removing felons from the industry.

He said the council, which supervises health facilities in the state, would be also asked to rule on a new problem, involving a nursing home at 311 West 231 Street built by Eugene Hollander, another convicted promoter. A cousin of Mr. Hollander's organized a nonprofit group that contracted to rent it from him, under the name Tichya Nursing Home, and another cousin was found to be its administrator.

Opening Deferred

The opening of the home has been deferred pending an inquiry. Meanwhile it was learned that, although the building plans filed with the department called for 14 inches of roof insulation, there appeared to be no insulation at all. According to an architect, this would mean a 20 percent increase in heating cost, which would be paid by Medicaid.

The leasing of the Hollander home to the Tichya group was protested by Community Planning Board 14, which said it had not been consulted. Charles G. Moerder, the chairman of the board, said the rental, amounting to $450,000 a year, virtually tax free, was approximately what Mr. Hollander had asked of another tentative tenant last year, before his plea of guilty to stealing $1.1 million from Medicaid.

Mr. Hollander, who is awaiting sentencing, has asked the department to let him continue as operator of the Congress Nursing Home in Brooklyn. He owns six nursing homes, of which one has closed and another is scheduled to be closed as unsafe.

TV: 'Dynasty' and 'Road'

2 Brothers' Lives in 1800's Are Traced —Charing Cross Bookshop in Drama

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Tonight at 9, NBC-TV gives two full hours to a production called James Michener's "Dynasty." Presumably, if Mr. Michener can sell books, his name in the billing can't hurt. It seems that Mr. Michener's "Dynasty" is an "original story... created for television." But the actual script has been written by Sidney Carroll, who has "adapted Michener's story for television." The business of creation can be extremely muddy.

Beginning in Ohio of the 1820's, the story covers 35 years to the money-accumulating lives of two brothers, John (Harris Yulin) and Matt (Stacy Keach), and John's wife (Sarah Miles). They establish homes, begin businesses, protect runaway slaves, have children and juggle their sex lives. The script is heavy with quaint uses of language. First names are used incessantly in direct address, and the more poetic lines are shameless ("I was your brother who taught me 'tis you I love").

The performances are remarkably good. Miss Miles is particularly intriguing with her tidbit demonstrations of defiance and neurosis. "Dynasty" works pleasantly enough until the very final scenes. Then quite suddenly, an ordinary but solid story of pioneering quickly begins dabbling with the very much darker themes of vicious greed and murder. The shock proves fatal.

On public television this evening, Anne Jackson is given an opportunity to recover beautifully from the unrewarding rigor of last night's "20 Shades of Pink." The thoroughly charming vehicle is "84, Charing Cross Road," based on a book by Helene Hanff. First published in 1970, it is a highly unlikely source for a TV dramatization. The content is restricted solely to letters exchanged by Miss Hanff and the staff of Marks & Company, secondhand booksellers in London, at 84, Charing Cross Road. The first letter was written in October 1949, the last in January 1969.

A writer for television, "Hallmark Hall of Fame," "Ellery Queen" Miss Hanff began by answering an ad for out-of-print books in The Saturday Review of Literature. The business transactions quickly evolved into more personal connections, with the somewhat brash New Yorker bestowing her candid opinions and affection on the booksellers. With Britain still undergoing austerity measures after the war, she sent packages of food and clothes. They sent back

Roundup Time in Albany: Comic Opera

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 12—From motel rooms, parking lots, bars, restaurants, and as far away as 40 miles down the Thruway, enough startled Assemblymen were rounded up early this morning by the state police and frantic staff members to produce the votes to keep a state agency out of default.

The police dragnet was only one in a bizarre series of events surrounding an Assembly session that hovered for hours between the comic and the surreal and left one aide to Stanley Steingut, the Assembly Speaker, shaking his head and muttering "After 200 years of democracy, it's come to this."

Among the more memorable scenes was one in which Assemblyman Stanley Fink, a Brooklyn Democrat who is chairman of the Codes Committee, burst into the Speaker's office and shouted excitedly. "The troopers just caught five more at a Hot Shippe."

Members who had already been snared argued only half jokingly over whether a state trooper could really bring an Assemblyman back to Albany against his will and what would happen to a member who refused to come.

The Panic Begins

What started it all was the Assembly leadership's decision to adjourn the session shortly after 11 o'clock last night. So many members had already left Albany that the leadership, lacking the needed 76 votes to pass a package of five bills that are part of the Governor's $2.6 billion rescue of the state agencies, decided the bills could wait until Monday.

But so sooner had the session formally adjourned than members of the Governor's staff converged on the Speaker's office, insisting in frantic stricken tones that without one of the bills the State Dormitory Authority would default today on $30 million worth of notes.

While the Governor's aides told the Capitol police to lock the exits, Mr. Steingut agreed to ask the state police to round up the members who had already left. Paul Whitaker, a relatively junior deputy counsel, called the local barracks to make the request, and came away stunned.

"They didn't ask me for identification or anything," he said. "They just said they'd do it. I never knew I was so powerful."

The Speaker's staff, meanwhile, was on the telephone working from lists of motels where the Assemblymen stay and restaurants they frequent.

As the members straggled in, meanwhile, a frightening thought occurred to the staff lawyers. The Assembly had adjourned until Monday, and under the State Constitution only the Governor can call the Legislature into an unscheduled session.

While aides began an urgent telephone search for Mr. Carey, who had left Albany for New York City, the lawyers came up with still another problem. The Senate had already passed the bill and gone home. But if the Assembly approved the bill in a special session, the Senate action taken in an ordinary session would not count and the Senate would have to be called back to pass the bill again in a special session of its own.

A few reporters lounged casually near a telephone at a secretary's desk from which Robert J. Morgado, the Director of State Operations, was trying to find the Governor. "How about going away?" Mr. Morgado said mildly as the reporters suggested various night spots where Mr. Carey might be found.

"We're just trying to help," one reporter said.

"You can really help by not writing a word about this entire night," Mr. Morgado replied.

Finally, the lawyers decided that the Assembly could simply vote to suspend its own rules and withdraw the motion by which it had adjourned.

That still left the problem of passing the bill. Passage requires a majority not of those present, but of the entire 150-member house, or 76 votes. Somewhat over 50 Democrats were on hand, leaving the Democratic leadership dependent on the mercies of the Republican opposition, on which the Democrats had rarely been able to count during earlier fiscal emergencies.

Duryea Helps

Assemblyman Perry B. Duryea of Montauk, L. I., the Republican leader, called his members into a conference and persuaded them to go along. And so at 1:40 A.M., Speaker Steingut gavelled the Assembly into session with the traditional phrase, "The house will come to order."

"Wanna beer?" came a voice from the ambiguous boundary between the Democratic and Republican seats.

Mr. Duryea introduced the bill, an innocuous sounding technical measure that allowed the State Insurance Fund to "roll over" its holdings of notes that the Dormitory Authority would otherwise have had to redeem today.

"Those of us who have been accused of being the irresponsible minority have chosen to cooperate to the fullest," Mr. Duryea said, savoring every word.

The moment was his, as the Democrats acknowledged when they greeted his speech with applause.

TV SETS REVIVAL OF 'FLASH GORDON'

WNET Will Offer 3 Serials In Move to Woo Youth

"Flash Gordon," the space serial from the 1930's and 40's that starred Buster Crabbe, will be televised by WNET/Channel 13 on Friday nights at 7 beginning March 19.

The public television station has been using the 7 P.M. time slot to compete with the network newscasts that are shown during the same half-hour. The strategy, a station official said, is to attract both a young and an old audience with the hope that the youngsters will stay tuned for the more serious programs that follow.

According to the station, the three "Flash Gordon" serials were leased for $12,000. This includes the right for the station to show the films more than once. Rebroadcasts have been scheduled for Sunday nights at 11 beginning March 21. The three serials add up to a total of 40 programs.

Tennis on TV Anyone? Coverage Increasing

In response to the growing popularity of tennis in recent years, the television networks have been increasing coverage of the matches and have created tennis events specifically for television.

Although the ratings for tennis programs on weekend afternoons have typically been modest, they have, nevertheless, attracted a segment of the audience many networks desire to reach — what the networks say are the "young, educated and affluent."

Among the events that have been created for the television audiences are such programs as CBS-TV's "Heavyweight Championship of Tennis," which matches major tennis stars; and ABC-TV's "Allan King Tennis Classics," a "celebrity-pro" competition.

NBC-TV calls itself the "leader in live tennis" because it broadcasts such major matches as Wimbledon and the Italian and the French Open Championships. CBS-TV, however, will carry the United States Open Championship at Forest Hills, Queens, this fall.

Women's tennis has received particular attention with the scheduling on CBS of the Women's Tennis Association tour and on ABC of the World Series of Women's Tennis.

Wometco to Purchase Channel in Newark

Wometco Enterprises Inc., a Florida-based concern that owns 3 television stations, 11 cable television systems and a chain of movie theaters, has signed a letter of intent to purchase an 80 percent interest in the Blonder-Tongue Broadcasting Corporation, owner of WBTB-TV, Channel 68, in Newark, and an 80 percent interest in BTVision Inc., a corporation that plans to program the station's evening hours with pay-television entertainment.

Channel 68 is authorized by the Federal Communications Commission to provide pay-television in addition to its present regular over-the-air programs. The station's present emphasis is on financial news and special interest shows.

Blonder-Tongue had to suspend activities after several months because of financial difficulties. The station then resumed operations last September under new management.

Louis Wolfson 3d, Wometco's senior vice president, said he planned to offer pay-television "directly" to home viewers because he "don't need cable." Blonder-Tongue will manufacture a device that will allow a pay-television subscriber to receive the channel through regular over-the-air broadcast frequencies.
